Violins, Violas, Violoncellos,
and Double-Basses

BY

CRASKE.

THESE are the very best of all modern Violins, some of them fifty and sixty years old, perfect reproductions of the great masters, and equal to them in tone, workmanship, and varnish. Some of them have been sold by unprincipled dealers as genuine Cremonas for very high prices, and some fairly on their own merits for as much as £240.

No man, unassisted, ever made so many Violins as "CRASKE." In addition to what he made for Forster, Dodd, and Mr. Clementi, he finished with his own hands over 2,000 Violins, 250 Violas, 250 Violoncellos, and 20 Double-Basses.

After a long and indefatigable industry Mr. Craske retired from business on an income of nearly £1,000 per annum, derived from investments in the Manchester Corporation Water Works.

The principal part of his life was spent in London, Bath, Birmingham (where he kept a shop on Snow Hill about twenty years), and Stockport, near Manchester; making also short residences in Leeds, Manchester, and Salford.

Before his retirement, Mr. Crompton bought the whole of his stock, and now has it for sale at 54, Barton Arcade, Manchester, along with a large collection of almost every noted make of Italian instruments.
Manchester, April 14, 1881.

Established 1874.

IMPROVED ORGAN PEDALS & ACTION

FOR

PIANOFORTES.J. HAMILTON,

FIRST INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER.

TESTIMONIAL.

Brinscall (near Chorley).

Sir,—I received the pedals and action yesterday, and have got it attached to my pianoforte. I must say that its utility and usefulness exceed all my expectations; it is perfectly noiseless, and just what every organist or any one wishing for pedal practice at home ought to have. I should have had a set of your pedals years ago had I known they acted so well.—I remain, yours most truly,

To Mr. J. Hamilton.

J. AINSWORTH, Prof. Music.

The Orchestra and Choir for May says: "We have had an opportunity of testing the efficiency of the Pedals for Pianofortes supplied by Mr. Hamilton, of Bristol. Their finish could not be better, and the simplicity and noiselessness of the Action is a great thing in their favour, as well as the ease with which they can be attached, and the fact that they do not injure the instrument in any way."

The Action is easily attached to any kind of Pianoforte in a short time.

A Set of Straight Pedals and Action (30 notes), price £4 4s.
A Set of Radiating and Concave Pedals and Action (30 notes), price £5 5s.

A Set of Straight and Concave Pedals, as recommended at the Organ Conference, 1881, and Action, price £5 5s.

Full printed instructions, "How to Attach," are sent with each set.
Liberal discount to the Trade and Profession. Agent—Mr. Arthur F.
Adcock, 4, Gladstone Terrace, Bolan Street, Battersea Bridge Road, S.W. Send for testimonials and terms to

J. HAMILTON, 26, UPPER BRISTOL ROAD, BRISTOL.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.—Infallible for sore throat, hoarseness, singing, and public speaking.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

THE NEW YEAR.

ABOUT this time in the last century the political world was just on the spin, and nearing the vortex of the French revolution. Six years hence we shall be celebrating the centenary of that event. Many learned navigators in political science will be calculating the distance we have run and what are our bearings after a century of new methods of propulsion, and when we may expect to sight the lights or headlands of Utopia. There are not a few musicians who, in taking a similar retrospect in connection with their own art, have come to the conclusion that we are already in soundings, but that it is no promised land which is ahead of us. In short, they think we are in difficulties, and that music is falling on evil days. The raw material of the art, they tell us, is becoming exhausted. There are others who, sanguine in temperament and busy in their professional calling, would smile at such a fantastic conception of the future of their art. They found their belief on practical knowledge, both of men and music, and think naturally that so long as people have fingers and throats they will play and sing, and business will be brisk. The common-sense view of the professor is like that of the cobbler who, without any particular ideal or cosmogony, has a lively faith in the eternity of soles and upper-leathers. Still, the alarmists are far from being irrational. It is not only that the twelve semitones of the pianoforte have been fingered and thumbed into a tonicless pulp, but the primitive sounds and surroundings out of which the art of each nation has been partly evolved—hill and plain, sunshine and storm, the wind, the sea, the pipe, the horn—have been so used up in drama and symphony that in search of material we are now driven to the tent of the gypsy or into the nether-world of the Nibelung. There is always a glint of hope in a never failing direction—religion—as well as in physical science. Whilst the one provides us with methods and means—new strings, as it were—the other will stir them, fitfully but steadfastly. M. Gounod, if we can believe his interpreter in a recent interview, is of opinion that the characteristics of the music of the future will be simplicity and power. The same idea has occurred to many; and it only expresses negatively what has already been said in regard to the exhaustion of the materials of the art, except that it may specially refer to the technical resources by the aid of which compositions of the day are spun out and aesthetically coloured in dainty but fleeting tints. There is no objection to the colours, or to the weft or warp. The machinery and taste are perfect; but the stuff is defective, and, we may depend upon it, the fashion is about to change in respect to the material. Science points to ultimate redemption in just intonation and new qualities of tone—a combination that might endow the art with fresh powers and a kind of gorgeous simplicity of effect admirably suited for accompaniment to the higher class of declaimed or intoned drama. But musicians, for the present, have naturally a dread of any such revolution consigning the cherished masterpieces of absolute music, if not to oblivion, to a secondary position, besides rendering the labours of their own lives useless; for none but a genius of the first order can handle new materials effectively. Whether musicians like it or no, the prevailing torpor in the inventive faculties of the musical world proves that there is a hitch somewhere. The year opens again on the whole of Europe with a complete dearth of novelty. The men who are to the front, are old or middle-aged; and we know more or less all they are likely to accomplish. We have been informed, and suppose it to be true, that Mr. Carl Rosa has lately taken a round amongst the lyric theatres in Germany. He reports that the managers in the Fatherland repeat the same tale one after the other. "Give us," they say, "something—anything. We can find nothing that is new, or that will do." It is quite possible they may have asked, "Have you anything for us in England?" We cannot undertake to say what Mr. Carl Rosa may have replied; but not very long since, had we been in his position, we should have said, "No." Few would have the hardihood to say so now. In no part of Europe is there at this moment so vigorous and promising a musical awakening as in our own country. We have lately quite lost a somewhat objectionable provincial accent; and henceforth we shall be received into good continental society, and treated as one of the family of musical nations—even if for a time we are petted as a returned prodigal. Our younger composers have already extended our new-born fame beyond the four seas, and in opera we can look forward a few months hence to another and brilliant example of native talent. The only fear is that, in losing our provincial manners, we may be too eager to be of "very soft society, and great showing;" and insist upon talking high German. For the moment it is true that the accent of the best music in all countries—Italy included—is German. It was not always so in Germany itself; and the accent begins to show signs of decay and innovation, which may sooner or later mar its general acceptance. The greatest composers, like very great authors in literature or science, belong to no nationality. The same may be said of all academic music. The true native element is best reflected in opera, and in the operas of minor composers, such as Kreutzer, Bishop, Balfe, Marschner, and—to rise in the scale—Weber and Auber, who were certainly not minor composers, nor were they giants. One of these days someone with sufficient knowledge and leisure will take up the subject "minor composers," and show us how the popular element they preserved gave staying power and individuality to rising art. It may be the duty of pedagogues to point to the highest examples and to disparage the rest; but it is not always wise. The other day we read a review of what was no doubt an excellent work by a lady, and entitled "Children's Tales: Moral and Otherwise." The reviewer seemed to prefer those that were "otherwise." What he meant is what we all mean by mildly protesting against dogmatic and academic injunctions. As for high moral imitations of great masters, we have been long enough in tow of Germany. It is time we slipped the hawser and sailed away under our own musical ensign. We must not forget that there are philologists who look upon us as Dutchmen speaking with a Celtic accent. Between the English Teuton and that portion of modern Germany which has lately, and indeed for a century and more, influenced her music there is no racial sympathy. We have in our own islands Celtic tribes of high musical gifts; we have our own musical traditions, as well as our own native moor and fell, and grange, and waving woodlands. The spirit of these dwells in our own simple music, and would thrive in more modern and complex forms, provided they are not cut-and-dry reproductions of old models. What we have to seek is to express our own English thoughts in an accent sufficiently conventional and refined to be universally accepted. The country in which the merely national accent is best preserved is Spain; and it ranks below England and Russia as a musical country, supposing the test of rank to be the number of composers of European fame a country produces. A fondness for music is no test at all; and a too liberal patronage of exotic music and foreign artists is a proof of native inferiority. There is indeed another test—the national receptivity or sense of music. English deficiency in that respect is for us the most practical consideration at the present hour. What is now being done in the way of elementary musical education and in popularising the study of music will tend to renew the musical sense which certainly existed to some extent in England, irrespective of Celtic Britain, two or three centuries ago, and perhaps more in the last century than in this. We fear we should have to leave strictly musical considerations were we to attempt to pursue the subject. It is sufficient to remember that, with all our superior advantages at this period, the people in our towns, and particularly in the north, work incessantly amid dismal surroundings more debasing than mere poverty. The Maypole and morris-dance were perhaps sorry reliefs to serfdom; but they symbolise the wants of our day, and in the last century, from the reign of Queen Anne to the early part of that of George III., the country, whilst laying the foundation of present day commercial prosperity, and with a relatively sparse population, was blest for a long period with glorious summers and abundant harvests, which made rural England in many respects an Arcadia. In our day, rural England is being depopulated, and in some districts it is a forlorn expanse of pasture such as we see in the wilds of Australia; whilst the population in general is pressing on the resources of the country. Musical culture at the Universities, Royal Colleges, and Royal Academies will be of little avail unless the heart of the nation has room to throb in response to their music and react on the higher culture itself. Music is not like the study of Greek; it is an active and living influence, and would soon die of inanition if separated from the national substance. With all our fancied grievances, social and artistic, we can still say that never had we greater faith in the immediate future of English music than at this moment. The new year opens most auspiciously, in regard to general musical activity, education, trade and mechanical invention, as well as to the coveted prospect of taking our due rank amongst nations as creators within the limits still left in the music of our era.

"ELIJAH"

A COMPARISON OF THE ORIGINAL AND REVISED SCORES

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

PART II.

THE second part opens in the MS. with a recitative for tenor, "Elias is come already, and they knew Him not, but have done unto Him whatever they listed." This recitative, which was sung at Birmingham by Mr. Hobbs, did not enter into the original plan of the work. Evidence on the point is clear, and, moreover, we know that Mendelssohn made the addition after his score had been copied and bound, the leaf on which the recitative is written being pasted in. A pencil note at the head of the page runs thus: "This is the beginning of the second part.—F. M. B.," while, as though to make assurance doubly sure, a second note, "A recit. comes before this," prefaces "Hear ye, Israel." The recitative is as subjoined:—

No. 1.
Str.

E - li - as is come al - read - y and they knew Him, they knew Him not, But have done un - to Him what - ev - er they lis - ted,

Its removal after the Birmingham performance was an act of judgment which few will be inclined to contest.

No. 21.—Aria, "Hear ye, Israel." The text, "Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" does not appear in the original Adagio of this number. Instead thereof, we find the passage given below:—

No. 2.

Er hat sein Volk ge - ru - fen a - ber sie
Öb. & Cl.
cres. p
mer - ken es nicht, a - ber sie ge - hor - chen cres. sf
nicht, a - ber sie merken es nicht sie gehorchen nicht.
dim. sf

Some changes were also made in the scoring of the movement, mainly to give the wind parts further development, but they are not important enough for quotation.

The recitative "Thus saith the Lord," connecting the Adagio with the Allegro molto, is altogether new as it stands in the printed score. In the MS. we find this:—

No. 3.

Yet to the righteous saith the Lord, the Ho-ly One of Is-ra-el.
Cl. & Bsns.

The Allegro molto war at first scored for three trombones, in addition to the instruments now employed. Removing these, Mendelssohn made other and important changes. In the first place he substituted the words "Be not afraid, for I am thy God; I, the Lord, will strengthen thee," for "thou art My people: wake up, stand up, Jerusalem." This, however, necessitated very little rearrangement of the music, though the passage was retouched in many of its details. The principal alteration is found immediately before the words "Say, who art thou?" Here the MS. has:—

No. 4.

Wake up, . . . wake up, Je - ru - sa - lem, Je - ru - sa - lem.
fp Strings Wind sustain.

Je - ru - sa - lem, Je - ru - sa - lem.
f

The last four bars are, in substance, repeated by the orchestra before the entry of the voice on "Say, who art thou?" Passing over a number of minor changes in the scoring—Mendelssohn's exceeding carefulness overlooked scarcely a bar—an important revision occurs where now we have the unaccompanied passage—

No. 5.

Say, who art thou?

leading to the Coda. Instead of the two bars just quoted, the MS. contains eleven, which are those following:—

No. 6.

Say, who art thou? Say, who art thou?
Clars.

test, that thou for - get - - - test?

The Coda of the MS. is substantially that of the printed score. There are, it is true, some differences in the instrumentation, and others caused by inserting the words "Be not afraid, for I am thy God," &c., instead of "Thou art My people: wake up, stand up, Jerusalem." This last-mentioned change is exceedingly happy, because the opening passage of the succeeding number takes up the text and emphasises it.

No. 22. Chorus, "Be not afraid." The opening section of this chorus is marked in the MS. "Andante maestoso," not "Allegro maestoso ma moderato," as now; while the second section, "Though thousands languish," &c., is directed to be taken "Allegro vivace" instead of "Piu animato." There is no opficleide part in the original score. For the rest we meet with only the slightest change till the Codetta of the first section is reached. At that point the MS. has the following:—

No. 7.

Be not a - afraid, thy help is near, thy help is near, thy help is near, God . . . the Lord say -

- eth un-to thee, Be not a-fraid.

Throughout the whole of the second section of the chorus, the first and second violins or the second violins and violas carried on an accompaniment of quaver triplets, as thus:—

No. 8.

This has disappeared, nor is its removal the only change. Originally the tenors and basses sung the notes now left to horns, as the new theme is announced by the contraltos. A few bars later the tenor chorus was similarly used in counterpoint to the theme before enunciating the subject itself. For the removal of these passages Mendelssohn's judgment will hardly be impeached, since they tended to complicate the design of the choral fugue without corresponding advantages. So many variations in the working of the subject were also made by the untiring master that to show them it would be needful to print almost every bar. Enough that, for the most part, they developed the counterpoint to the subject, giving it greater variety and effect. It is necessary to make one quotation. The original Ritardando leading to the resumption of the principal subject stands thus:—

No. 9. Horns & Trumpets.

rit. Basses.

Tenors join.

Be not a-fraid. Be not a-fraid.

It need hardly be said that a comparison of the foregoing with the passage in the printed score is altogether to the advantage of the after-thought. From the re-entrance of the first subject to the end of the chorus the two scores are alike.

We now enter upon a region of so great change that it may almost be said we are dealing with different works. No part of the revised score better shows what resolution the master brought to a task which, in the nature of things, must have been irksome, or how little the enthusiastic verdict of Birmingham influenced his judgment. To begin with, the address of Elijah to Ahab, "The Lord hath exalted thee," &c., opening No. 23 of the printed score, has no place at all in the MS., which enters at once upon Jezabel's recitative. The recitative itself is much altered. Thus we find it in the original:—

No. 10.

Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Is-ra-el When Eli-jah's pow-er is great-er than the king's? The gods do so to me, and more, if on the morrow a-bout this time I make not his life as the life of one of he with the sword des-troy-ed.

At this point the chorus enters. We continue the quotation without reference to the orchestra, which, always in the agitated manner shown above, sustains the vocal harmony, but leaves the solo unsupported:—

From this point to the end the printed score, save for a few unimportant alterations, corresponds with the MS.

No. 24. Chorus, "Woe to him." This chorus has only three or four final bars in common with the one occupying its place in the Birmingham score. Even the words are different, while both as to words and music the newer version is no less an advance upon the older than the number preceding it is better than that which it superseded. The vocal parts of the original chorus are given below. As to the orchestral parts, it will suffice to say that the instruments employed (oboes, four horns, drums and strings) are mostly used in strengthening the vocal harmonies, while carrying on the distinctive rhythm of the piece:—

On the last bar, Elijah's recitative "Though stricken, they have not grieved" begins, and we are therefore to regard Obadiah's address to the prophet, "Man of God, now let my words be precious in thy sight," as an after-thought. The original recitative differs considerably from its successor, as a glance at the subjoined makes plain:—

THE GREAT COMPOSERS

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

No. XII.—ROSSINI (continued from page 65a).

SINCE recording last month the banquet offered to Rossini in Paris, before setting out for England, a contemporary report has come under our eye, and we may be permitted a reversion to the subject for the sake of the toasts proposed. That "of the evening" has already been given, and we have seen how Lesueur defined Rossini as one "whose genius has opened a new path, and formed an epoch in the art of music." Finding his "tag" well received, Lesueur tried again, and gave "Gluck—rich in all the resources of German science, he felt the spirit of French lyric tragedy, of which he gave the model." Others then took up the strain. Garcia proposed "Grétry—the most sensible and one of the most melodious of French musicians." Boïeldieu offered "Méhul—I see Rossini and the shade of Mozart applaud this toast." Hérold followed on with "Pasiello—full of ingenuity and passion, he rendered popular in all parts of Europe the Italian school;" and Panzeron, speaking for Auber, gave "Cimarosa—the precursor of Rossini." As for the distinguished guest, his tact did not desert him. Instead of casting about for superlatives, he rose, glass in hand, and uttered the simple word "Mozart." The effect was electrical. After each toast, we are further told, the band played a piece of music by the master honoured. An English editor, translating this report for the benefit of his readers, took care to throw cold water upon it in the shape of a footnote which said, with fine insular sarcasm, "This article is from a French journal, therefore must not be understood quite literally. For instance, in a party that is said to have represented 'all the arts and talents,' we find the name of no very distinguished poet, painter, or sculptor. Cherubini, the greatest composer in Paris, is not mentioned as being one of the company, nor Charon, the celebrated theorist. No rank (this is truly English) appears to have graced the fête, and, in short, either the French report is very imperfect, or the meeting was not of the very brilliant kind that the writer would wish us to believe." We do not know what "brilliance" meant sixty years ago, but a company of the present day having in it such men and women as Mlle. Mars, Madame Pasta, Madame Colbrand, Mlle. Georges, Talma, Boïeldieu, Garcia, Auber, Hérold, and Horace Vernet would be regarded as positively dazzling, without the aid of "rank."

Rossini appears to have had a bad passage across the Channel, and to have suffered considerably from sickness. At any rate, he pleaded illness when the Russian ambassador called, within a few minutes of the master's arrival, to conduct him to Brighton, where the Court was then in residence. Rossini excused himself for the moment, but in a few days was well enough to start for the Sussex watering-place. The account we have of his reception by "the first gentleman in Europe" reads like a story of Italy in her great artistic day, when princes deigned to wait upon painters; and makes it easy to understand why Rossini told Ferdinand Hiller that "of the charm of George the Fourth's personal appearance and manner it is impossible to form any idea." M. Azevedo states that the monarch sent a "vinaigrette" to convey the musician from his hotel to the Pavilion, explaining that a "vinaigrette" was a species of chaise à porteur, mounted on wheels and drawn by men. In this vehicle Rossini proceeded through the streets of Brighton, and soon found himself in a saloon where the King was playing cards with a lady. "Sit down and take a hand," said George, after warmly greeting his visitor. Rossini begged to be excused. A musician's purse, he pleaded, was not well furnished enough to struggle against such powerful opponents. Presently his Majesty asked if Rossini would like to hear the royal band. Of course Rossini would be enchanted; whereupon the King linked his arm in that of the son of the inspector of slaughter-houses and conducted him to the music saloon, offering his snuff-box on the way with the greatest familiarity. Having taken their seats, his Majesty said: "They are going to play for me a piece which I have chosen myself; perhaps it will not be to your taste; but you can console yourself with others of your own preference. When this is over, you are the master to do as you like with my orchestra." Imagine the delight of Rossini when the band struck up the overture to his own "La Gazza Ladra." "It is impossible" observes M. Azevedo, and we must all agree with him, "to go further in the direction of good taste and delicate procedure than did his Britannic Majesty on this occasion." Rossini was not to be beaten at a game in which he excelled. Pretending an imperfect acquaintance with our National Anthem, he called for "God save the King," and the monarch at once understood that he had met his match in courtesy. In the course of the evening George presented Rossini to the aristocracy present, and thus gave him a footing in high society which afterwards served him well.

The most extraordinary reports were circulated as to what took place at the Pavilion on this evening so memorable for Rossini. Among other things it was said, in print, that the master behaved with great arrogance, and upon being asked to sing at the close of the evening brusquely declared that he had "had enough of music for one evening." All this a contemporary journal, the Musical Review, flatly denied, professing to give an exact account of what took place. From its columns we transcribe a single paragraph:—

"Soon after, Rossini sang one of his own compositions so highly to the gratification of his Majesty and the party assembled that it was the general opinion he was one of the finest tenor singers in Europe. . . . Being again requested to sing, he gave an imitation of one of the old Italian school of singers, which English humanity and English decorum have had the honour to banish from the stage. If this was a violation of propriety, in so far he is amenable to the charge, but his Majesty was first consulted. The King desired to hear him in a third song, but Rossini excused himself by saying he feared his voice was so exhausted by this effort that he should be found incapable of giving further gratification to judges so capable as those before whom he then had the honour of performing; and this is the elegant turn which has been so mistranslated by the inadvertency, or more probably by the malice, of some interested bystander. In point of fact, it is only common justice to state that the department of the foreign composer was easy, yet as deferential as was becoming, and bespoke that self-possession which good sense and good breeding and a thorough acquaintance with good society alone confer."

Another English journal—the Harmonicon—spoke to the same effect, and said:—

"There is good reason to believe that much of what has been reported upon this subject is destitute of foundation; and it is stated, upon no mean authority, that the King was pleased with his visitor, who certainly was highly flattered and charmed by the affable manner of the British sovereign. His Majesty possesses a great deal of worldly knowledge, and, in his heart, as much despises the sycophancy of courtiers, whether of high or low degree, as he values the independent spirit of a man of talent who asserts, in the respectful manner that good breeding and good sense dictate, the dignity of his nature."

Apropos, we may quote the opinion of a contemporary writer upon Rossini's social qualities:—

"Nothing can be more agreeable than the conversation of Rossini, at least to an Italian taste. He has a mind all fire and vivacity, starting from subject to subject, and viewing everything in a strong, though frequently grotesque, point of view. A manner so rapid and discursive would be more astonishing than agreeable were it not enlivened with a fund of anecdote. The everlasting restlessness of his career during twelve years, composed, as he himself has expressed it, of eternal goings and comings; his constant intercourse with singers—the most gay and thoughtless of beings—as well as his continual introductions into high and elegant society, have afforded him abundant opportunities of seeing life in all its shades and varieties."

We may well ask, with the Harmonicon: "Is it likely that such a man should forget himself in the presence of the King of England?"

The storm ament the Pavilion reception raged in Paris as well as in London, and nothing was too bad to say against Rossini on the one hand, or too good to advance in his favour on the other. Opportunely, a certain Count Theobald Walsh published a book which gave the master's enemies plenty of ammunition wherewith to serve their guns. Walsh, after giving a comical account of "Matilda di Shabron," as played at Milan, summed up Rossini's qualifications, and discovered the whole of his musical power in three things:—

"First, a grand modulation of a two-fold kind (whatever that may mean), adapted to the expression of joy and furious passion. Second, a system of repetition, which is sincerely to be regretted, but which is well calculated to produce that disposition of mind which may not improperly be termed the slumber of the soul. Third, the crescendo."

Walsh continued in the same ironic vein:—

"After all we must not be unjust to Rossini; he has many good points, and it would not be difficult to find in his thirty chefs-d'œuvre at least a hundred bars which the best masters would not be ashamed to own. All things considered, his opera seria, compared to that of Mozart, is nearly the same as the works of Pixérécourt when put in competition with those of Racine."

Against this it is only fair to set the opinion of a champion on the opposite side, Signor Carpani, who described Rossini as "the sun of harmony," credited him with five unmatched qualities: first, novelty—a "wondrous star which artists and poets are seeking night and day on the vast horizon of known and common ideas"; second, fecundity; third, song; fourth, expression; fifth, learning, as to which our author wrote:—

"But the learning of the genius of Pesaro is not an inflexible tyrant who fetters by his severe decrees the freedom of fancy and the natural bent of nature, who prescribes a mass of rules derived by tradition from the schools of the Flemings of the middle ages—rules that are abhorrent to melody and freeze the very current of genius by cold and abstract calculations. No, the learning of Rossini is the daughter of experience, the result of an exquisite and perfect organisation, aided by such general principles as are to be learnt in the school of counterpoint of every poor village organist."

While the storm raged around him, Rossini superintended the rehearsals of his "Zelmira" at the King's Theatre, where it was produced on January 24, 1824. "So earnest was the public curiosity," we are told, "that the pit was filled in less than a quarter of an hour." With stimulating this feeling Rossini himself had much to do. "When he entered the orchestra he was received with loud plaudits, and so eager was the audience to catch sight of his person that every individual in the pit stood on the seats to obtain a view. He continued for a minute or two to bow respectfully to the house, and at length the piece began. The Maestro's person, whatever it might have been, is not now of such superiority as to convey any adequate extenuation for ladies leaving their palaces and their lords . . . He is scarcely of the middle height, lusty, and upon the whole, with rather a heavy air. He certainly looks more like a sturdy beef-eating Englishman than a sensitive, fiery-spirited native of the soft climate of Italy. His countenance, when at rest, is intelligent and serious, but bears no marks of the animation which pervades, and indeed forms, the principal feature of his music."

"Zelmira" was not a success. The musical journals praised much of it, but the public voted the work heavy, and, after a few performances, it was withdrawn. According to a chronicler of the period, the opera remained on the stage while it did chiefly because of Garcia's part therein, Madame Rossini making but little headway against the rivalry of Catalani, then in the zenith of her powers. Her technical skill all admired, but the organ had not the brilliancy, richness and freshness which were expected, and it was held that the lady had drawn near the period "when retirement becomes a duty to those who have reached so high an eminence—when it may soon, indeed, become a matter of self-respect." "Il Barbiere" followed "Zelmira," but this did not so much concern the master, who, according to Azevedo, was busily writing the opera "La Figlia dell' Aria," which his contract with the management bound him to provide. With regard to the work in question most contradictory statements are on record. M. Azevedo, in common with all Rossini's French biographers, give it a name as above; on the other hand, Mr. Ebers, in his "King's Theatre," calls it "Ugo, Rè d'Italia," and by that name we find it mentioned in a number of the Musical Review for 1824. Here we have to put against the French biographers statements made at the time when and on the spot where the new work was to have been produced. There can be no difficulty in concluding upon which side the weight of evidence preponderates. The two sets of historians are further at variance on the same subject. M. Azevedo says: "At the beginning of his stay in London Rossini composed, in the fulfilment of his contract, the first act of an opera called 'La Figlia dell' Aria.' He deposited his manuscript at the King's Theatre, and waited in vain for payment of the sum agreed upon. The manager of the theatre was then in a bad way. . . . On leaving England the master deputed a person to obtain the money due to him and also the score of the first act of 'La Figlia dell' Aria,' deposited at the theatre. He never heard anything either of the money or of the score." Thus M. Azevedo, writing long after the event. And now let us take the evidence of witnesses who were on the spot at the time. Mr. Ebers says: "Ugo, Rè d'Italia," the opera on which Rossini was engaged, had been at this time (late in the season) repeatedly announced for speedy performance, and with as repeated disappointments. At the end of May it was said to be only half written. Rossini had quarrelled with the management, and had accepted the situation of composer to the Académie Royale—an engagement which was to commence in a month or two. It began to be doubted whether 'Ugo' would ever be finished, and the event justified these doubts." On page 214 of the same book Mr. Ebers states that the opera was "nearly finished but never completed. It is now, I know not why, in the hands of Messrs. Ransom, the bankers."* Turning to the Musical Review for 1824, pp. 224-5, we find the statement following: "When he (Rossini) was retained by the proprietors of the King's Theatre, it was understood that a part of his contract—the part we should conceive the most important of his functions as a composer—was to write a new opera. A libretto, 'Ugo, Rè d'Italia' was selected, and, being of that intermediate species which is denominated demi-serious, it may be supposed to combine an extended groundwork for the display of various power. The piece was announced, but we have very good reason to believe that, up to a very late period of the season, only the melody of a portion of the first act had been actually written. Signor Bonelli (the manager) therefore, some time after having announced its speedy appearance, put the best face upon the matter, and assured the public that the very earnest desire Signor Rossini entertained to transcend all his former greatness, in compliance to the national judgment of so great a people, had rendered him so careful that it was found impossible to complete his opera this year." "Of course," sarcastically adds the Review, "this is true." From the conflicting testimony we gather two facts—that the opera was "Ugo, Rè d'Italia" and that Rossini wrote a part of it, but, for some reason or other, a part only.

If it be asked why Rossini so soon dropped away from the operatic enterprise he had come to sustain, we fear the true answer is not flattering to him as an artist. He was spoiled by the "great world," and fascinated by the amount of money he could make there, with greater certainty of payment and far more ease than at the theatre. The exclusive ladies of Almack's organised two Subscription Concerts at their Rooms to more adequately reward the popular favourite for the risk and inconvenience of crossing the Straits of Dover. Tickets of admission were sold by the patronesses at the rate of a guinea and a half per concert; but, this proving too much, the charge ultimately became a guinea. The first performance took place in May, with a small band of twenty instruments, and a number of vocalists, among whom were Catalani, Vestris, Colbrand-Rossini, and Garcia, as well as the master himself, who sang the Cavatina from "Il Barbiere." Sixteen pieces were in the programme, eleven by the hero of the occasion. On June 9, the second concert was given and thrown open to any who could pay the price. This time all the music in the scheme, save a piano solo, came from Rossini's pen, amongst it being an Ottavino, "I pianti delle Muse" on the death of Lord Byron, composed for the occasion. The proceedings were rather severely criticised. Thus, the Harmonicon said: "The Ottavino, on the death of Lord Byron, was sung by Signor Rossini (our critic means that he was the chief performer) who certainly did not spare his lungs on the occasion, though he could not bring himself to afford a few lines of printing to let his auditors know what words the Muse mixed with her tears. . . . As a whole, we never heard a duller concert than this, and although two or three clacquers, stationed at the bottom of the room, did now and then raise some partial applause and actually succeeded in getting the Ottavino encored, yet we will, without fear of contradiction, assert that nineteen-twentieths of the audience were as little amused as ourselves and much more dissatisfied." Rossini made money by the Concerts, nevertheless, and went on making money, letting himself out on view and as accompanist at private houses, for which he, with his wife, received fifty guineas per night. For these profitable engagements the master, we fear it must be said, neglected his public duties, and even the obligations of courtesy. True, he sang on two evenings at the Cambridge Festival, "farmed," and that very badly, by Catalani. For the rest, there is some evidence in a journal already quoted.*

"While we are speaking of insolence, it may perhaps be thought a supreme instance to relate that the Philharmonic Society voted an admission to Signor Rossini, who never once attended, so great is his love of art, and so intense his desire to witness its most magnificent demonstrations in the countries he visits. But why should we blame a professor who has been so much sought in private, that he has not been able to find time for the fulfilment of his public engagements, nor even to attend the benefit nights of those friends whose concerts he has undertaken to conduct. Genius gives plenary indulgences to all her sons for omitting duties which ordinary men are simple enough to consider in the light of moral obligations." According to the stories of the day, Rossini often received much more than the fifty guineas which were his terms. A certain nobleman is credited with having handed him £200 for attendance on a couple of nights, and a rich Jew, in return for a single soirée, presented him with some scrip afterwards sold for £300. All this was wonderful at the time, and roused up "envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness," though it would astonish nobody now, when operatic ladies receive two hundred guineas for singing a couple of songs. Rossini naturally made the best of it. The thing was a new sensation, and he revelled therein, despite the "repugnance to accompanying on the piano" which he professed to Ferdinand Hiller. He made seven thousand pounds in the course of the season and went back to Paris rich even, we should say, beyond his dreams. Meanwhile, the King and royal family continued their patronage to the master, who attended a weekly matinée at the house of Prince Leopold, whither that personage's respectable father-in-law, George IV., came now and then in the character of an august bass. Azevedo tells an anecdote, à propos, we know not on what authority, but if it be false, it is not dull. On one occasion, as the monarch and Rossini were engaged in singing a buffo duet, the august bass stopped, exclaiming that he was wrong in his time. "Sire," answered the composer, "you have the right to do what you please. Go on; I will follow you, even to the tomb." Go on they did, the royal performer at his sweet will, the other in courtly attendance. High in favour as Rossini was with the English aristocracy, he certainly did not conciliate the artistic world, and perhaps did not try. The tone of his conversation with Hiller about London matters was, no doubt, that with which he spoke to his intimates while here, and rumours got abroad that he had used disrespectful terms regarding our countrymen. Reference to the report was made by the Musical Review,† and with a quotation from its pages we may close our notice of Rossini in London:—

"We say we hope this (the report) is not true on his own account, for, as far as the country is concerned, it matters little indeed. But to the character of a man who has been treated with so much indulgence, and rewarded with such liberality, it must be very important; for if he does so speak of a people who have received his works and himself with so much regard, he must be at least one of the most ungrateful of mankind, and one of the most indiscreet. We therefore hope and imagine that the rumour is one of the aspersions to which elevation is always liable."

CONVENTIONAL MUSIC.

By HENRY C. LUNN.

WALKING many years ago with an artist whose name was not then so well known as it afterwards became, we arrived at a lovely spot overshadowed by trees, and sat down by the side of a large pool of water. As the eye of a painter is as much alive to the colours of nature as the ear of a musician is to the sounds, it can scarcely be supposed that we remained long in this position without some observations from my companion upon the beauty of the surroundings. To my surprise, however, he merely directed my attention to the pool at our feet, and asked me what I thought it looked like. Unconsciously almost, I replied that I thought it looked like water. "And so it undoubtedly does," he replied, "but it is the water of nature, and not of pictures. To me it looks exceedingly like black ink, and so it would look to you if you were a painter. Pictures are criticised by the laws of pictures and not by the laws of nature. Water must have light in it—never mind how it gets there—then everybody knows at once that it is water; and as you paint for everybody, and not for a jury of artists, however plentifully the market is supplied with conventional specimens, progress must necessarily be both slow and sure." No person acquainted with Turner's pictures can fail to see how applicable are these truths to art in the picture-gallery. So accurate an observer of nature could scarcely be expected to escape lashing by the critics when he dared to exhibit works which did not reproduce the characteristics of those which had preceded them. He was mad, it was said—always the verdict of the sane majority—he dabbled on colours without meaning, and painted such sunsets as had never been seen. Gradually, however, a few thinkers began to believe that there was some method in his madness; that in fact he had not misrepresented nature, but had too boldly represented her, in eccentric moments perhaps, but still at times when her very frowns added to her ever-varying beauty. Turner was then no longer a daring innovator, to be avoided, but a successful reformer, to be encouraged. His pictures were eagerly purchased by well-known connoisseurs, and engravings from his original works are now to be found in the rooms and in the portfolios of the most fastidious collectors.

Whether conventional literature will ever be attacked by a genius capable of giving us new forms which shall eventually take strong hold upon the public mind we cannot say; but certainly the novel of the day, for example, is scarcely founded upon a model which we should care to perpetuate. A murder, a mystery, and a rough kind of poetical justice at the conclusion will fitly describe a very large proportion of the modern works of fiction; and the rapid nature of what may be termed "fashionable novels" so removes them from criticism, that most persons are content merely to take them to the seaside and leave them there. Meanwhile, however, as in the pre-Raphaelite school of painting, there is always a tendency to escape from the conventional by going back, and this is more especially the case in dramatic literature, the scene and language of some of our modern plays deriving much of their attraction from being representative of a time when the drama was at its best. By this process common-place dialogue and common-place actions gain a factitious importance, the former from being cut into "blank verse," and the latter from being placed before us in costumes which in our daily life we never see. In poetry the style may be said to be restless; for with the desire to be original, so many authors succeed only in being eccentric. Wordsworth, who was not afraid of going to nature for inspiration, says, in the preface to his poems, "There never has been a period, and perhaps never will be, in which vicious poetry, of some kind or other, has not excited more zealous admiration, and been far more generally read, than good; but this advantage attends the good, that the individual, as well as the species, survives from age to age; whereas of the depraved, though the species be immortal, the individual quickly perishes; the object of present admiration vanishes, being supplanted by some other as easily produced, which, though no better, brings with it at least the irritation of novelty,—with adaptation, more or less skilful; to the changing humours of the majority of those who are most at leisure to regard poetical works when they first solicit their attention." All who know Wordsworth's poetry must be aware that whatever there is of "novelty" in it cannot be "irritating," for he seeks only to draw within his magic influence those who can feel, rather than admire, the verses of their author. We cannot, therefore, be surprised that at the conclusion of his Essay he says "if he were not persuaded that the contents of his works evinced something of the 'Vision and Faculty divine,' and that, both in words and things, they will operate in their degree to extend the domain of sensibility for the delight, the honour, and the benefit of human nature, notwithstanding the many happy hours which he has employed in their composition, and the manifold comforts and enjoyments they have procured to him, he would not, if a wish could do it, save them from immediate destruction—from becoming at this moment to the world as a thing that had never been." If all gifted with the poetical instinct were as conscientious as Wordsworth, there would be little danger of our degenerating either into purely conventional, or pedantic and mystical poetry; for it would be seen that, although the first might gratify the cupidity and the second the vanity of an author, the art could in neither case be in the slightest degree benefited.

Seeing, then, how in painting, literature, and the drama the fear of becoming conventional has occasionally led to the production of mere realism, and in some cases downright incoherence, it is not to be wondered at that music—which, being necessarily placed under the care of teachers, is too often cut to the fashion of the time—should break away from control, and attempt to gain a place in public estimation by setting at defiance the accepted canons of the art. Before, however, discussing the so-called remedies, let us endeavour to trace the causes which have led to the disease.

Of the Opera in England (for it is of this country that I am speaking) it is difficult indeed to convey any definite idea during the early part of the present century, for dramas with songs constituted the popular notion of such an entertainment, and the songs thus introduced were usually composed by the "Director of Music" at the theatre. Even when the public had advanced to the notion that a real Opera should have "more singing in it," the acting was the primary attraction; and when some lyrical works were imported from the continent, and produced here in a mutilated form, I have known light comedians cast for the principal parts, the music being sung by friends whom they always took about with them for the purpose. Balfe was unquestionably the first to reform this state of things; and yet, with all respect to his talent, I have no hesitation in saying that his Operas were as conventional as can possibly be imagined; and, as at the Italian Opera the works were modelled upon the same plan, there can be little wonder that they were willingly accepted by the public.

Passing from the Opera to "Domestic Music," we find that the pianoforte, which gradually crept into our drawing-rooms, was written for by fashionable teachers, who especially prepared their work for the market which they regularly supplied. Brilliancy for the right hand, supported by the left, was exactly what was required, and this was therefore exactly what was manufactured. Airs from the popular operas, tortured into all imaginable shapes, at first reigned supreme; but performers and listeners becoming in time somewhat tired of these effusions, original pieces began to be produced, and then came the necessity for titles. Thalberg having set the fashion of surrounding themes with elaborate embellishments, the list of "Showers," "Waterfalls," "Moonbeams," "Ripples," &c., began to increase so rapidly, that "fluttering" on the pianoforte became a real accomplishment; and a pianist who by some accident had acquired a good touch was compelled to yield the palm to one who could imitate "raindrops." Here, then, was a conventional style formed which lasts even to the present day. A "pretty piece" is one the setting of which contains so many "pearls" that the original insignificant little picture is almost lost, and the "fine performer" is the pianist who can play the greatest number of notes in a given time.

In approaching the subject of songs, which occupy so large a share of the attention of English amateur vocalists, a wide field for discussion presents itself; for here, perhaps, more than in any other branch of music, the desire has ever been to meet the popular taste, and it is only very lately that composers have dared to write for the few, in the hope that their efforts may eventually be appreciated by the many. Songs from Operas which were successfully running at the theatres were always eagerly purchased, for it was generally considered safe to sing in a drawing-room the vocal pieces which had been applauded on the stage. Those, however, which were written especially for domestic use, as a rule, contained but little meaning, either in the words or music. Some endeavoured to command attention by glorifying the deeds of military or naval heroes; others by praising conviviality, and declaring that one of the first duties of life was to "pass the bottle"; but the majority of these effusions were the inane outpourings of sentimental lovers who, comparing their idols to objects as unlike them as can possibly be imagined, employed two verses to prove the justice of the parallel, and the third to the declaration that until some absolutely impossible events happened, they would never forsake them. As these words were usually wedded to particularly uninteresting music—although sometimes a melody lingered for years after the verses were forgotten—we cannot be surprised that singers and listeners grew weary of them. Then gradually arose the type of song, every specimen of which, I think, might fitly be published with a mourning border. The composition usually opens with some verses overflowing with expressions of affection from a mother for her child, a child for her mother, a lover for his mistress, or a wife for her husband; but the "shadow of death" hovers around, and the last few lines (occasionally accompanied with arpeggios) express a hope that they shall all meet "in the skies." We have no desire to dwell upon this subject, and need only here say that with ballads detailing the happy, but untimely, end of "Match Girls" and "Crossing-sweepers," and a few harmless "Flirtation" songs, the scenes of which are laid at some well-known "Ferry" or "Toll," our conventional vocal style is now represented.

Much then as we owe to those who boldly gave us for the first time an Opera, it must have been seen that the conventional form which this assumed would lead in time to a desire for compositions more in consonance with the growing feeling for dramatic effect. Translations of the works which were played at the Italian Opera were now placed before the public, and gradually created a longing for a hearing of those much abused lyrical dramas which embodied the theories of the great Bayreuth reformer. It is not here the place to discuss the merits and demerits of a school which, if right, must necessarily prove that the former school was wrong. I only wish to draw attention to the fact that the conventional style must in the progress of time be broken up; and that, although the Nibelungen Ring may not be the model of the opera of the future, at least the talents of our composers will henceforth be directed into a new channel, and that no work for the operatic stage formed upon the plan hitherto adhered to will fully satisfy an operatic audience.

In the restless desire to escape from the conventional form which, as I have endeavoured to show pianoforte music has assumed, we find that some writers go back to Gavottes, Sarabandes and Musettes merely because such dances were composed by men who held the highest rank in the art. Others, more desirous of keeping pace with the times, imitate the Germans in producing descriptive pieces, on the supposition that music can represent the usual events in our daily life. Anything, perhaps, is better than the many "Water" pieces with which we are even now inundated; but I still long for the time when a man shall write from himself, and interest us with something demanding mind as well as fingers.

With regard to songs, there can be no question that something more representative of our advanced musical culture is absolutely demanded. In a paper by Eustace Breakspere, read at a meeting of the "Musical Association," speaking of our vocal pieces, it is truly said "In England, where we do not go altogether upon the old lines, the style of setting very often presents but a reflex of the German spirit. We ought to make a corresponding movement, but without losing the English sentiment and idiom of expression." It may be difficult to strike out a new path; but there are already indications that musical thinkers will not much longer accompany composers who insist upon keeping to the old ones. Whatever may be the result, the attempt to reform our present style must be a laudable one; and it would be at least refreshing to escape from songs the success of which depends upon arousing those recollections which, being buried within us, should be held as sacred as the tomb.

In considering the state of the art at the present day, my sole object has been to show that conventional music cannot live beyond a certain time; and that the attempts to break the bonds of custom, therefore, should at least be respected. Many reformers in politics, as well as in art, although not successful themselves, have left a legacy of thought to those who have used the gift to benefit the world. Let us therefore, give earnest attention to an artist who earnestly courts it; and if we would really aid the progress of healthy music, above all things let us be tolerant and hopeful.

It is evident that the many examples of criticisms upon country concerts in the local press, which we have from time to time quoted, have drawn attention to the subject more forcibly than could any observations of our own upon the incompetence of provincial musical critics without such illustrations. That, with the resident amateur and professional musicians in the towns where these concerts are given, notices of this kind are regarded as casting a slur upon the artistic culture of the neighbourhood is fully proved by the number of cuttings from the newspapers which we constantly receive, in the hope that we shall give them insertion in our columns. We can, of course, only spare room for occasional extracts from a few of these, and our many correspondents, therefore, whose contributions to our store are passed over must take the will for the deed. In one notice of a concert—full of misprints—the critic tells us that "the second part opened out with a grand pianoforte solo." A lady then sang "A bunch of cowslips," which, it is said, "was certainly an improvement on her last song, on the whole very sweetly sung, especially so in her bottom notes, which came out beautiful." Succeeding this was "a song by Mr. —, 'The Powder Monkey,' who was greeted with applause and an encore, in which he responded by singing the humorous song entitled 'Mistress Malone.'" After going through a catalogue of such compositions, the writer says that the concert was a "highly interesting and instructive one," and that it "will be long remembered by the musical community." But in all the extracts we have given, now and on former occasions, we doubt whether anything can be found to match the notice of a performance at a concert of Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor, which, the writer assures us, was played magnificently by the band. "This fine performance created a deep impression," he says, "and we are glad to compliment Mr. — on his admirable accompaniment." We trust that this pianist will give us many more such "accompaniments" to our standard Concertos.

A CONTEMPORARY in a recent notice of a child's book spoke of the letter-press being good and the illustrations bad, remarking, very truly, that it was as essential for readers in the nursery to be kept from coarsely executed pictures, as from coarsely written literature. We are very glad to find that our opinions upon the contents of these juvenile offerings are echoed in critical journals for which we have respect. It has been too much the custom to imagine that ill-drawn illustrations, accompanied by the most contemptible nonsense verses, will delight a child more than pleasing pictures with some refined and simple lines of poetry to describe them; but experience will prove to all who think on the matter that, as in the case of food, we should not think so much of what a child likes as of what is good for it. Nursery songs and juvenile music of all kinds, for example, move onwards with the times, and yet we have a little book now before us, designed to teach children their alphabet, in which the following lines occur:—

O, the Quadrille—there's the music you see,
You can play at home on Piano-forte.

and this "Quadrille" appears on the outside cover, and also in the body of the book, in a staff of four lines, without any bars or time signature, and with the treble clef written in all sorts of places. It may be said that all this can have no effect upon the little people who are learning their alphabet; but it must be remembered that the "verses" are addressed to those who can read; and that if they should endeavour to "play at home on Piano-forte" the Quadrille as written, they must either imagine that music is written on four lines, without bars, and with a crooked sign at the commencement, or be told by their elders that it is utter nonsense.

SOME time ago, in noticing an invention expressly intended for amateurs to copy printed music, we ventured to suggest that, as far as the copyright of such works is concerned, there can be but little difference between multiplying them publicly and privately. The plea that, in the case of friends supplying each other with copies of pieces or songs, no money passes between them, is by no means a valid one; for unquestionably the copyist steps in between the publisher and the purchaser, and supplies gratuitously what would otherwise, most probably, be bought and paid for. A letter from the "Music Publishers' Association," which appeared in our last number, at once sets the question at rest. In this we are requested to "acquaint the public of the fact that the multiplying of copies, by any means whatever, of copyright music or other works, without the sanction of the owner of the copyright, is a breach of the Copyright Acts, and subjects the offender to an action." The publication of this letter is a proof that although the proprietors of musical copyrights are resolved to defend their property, they do not wish to do so without duly giving notice of their intention; and, as further evidence of their desire to temper justice with mercy, we are also informed that they have abandoned proceedings against two offenders, who may perhaps have erred in ignorance of the law. Every respect is due to an Association acting with such courtesy; and we are glad to find not only that our protest against the practice of copying music was a legal one, but that the evidence of its legality has assumed so definite a form as to place the matter beyond a doubt.

THE Church of England Temperance Chronicle is scarcely a journal which our readers would expect us to quote from; but when it is recollected how the physiology of the voice is now occupying the attention of medical as well as musical professors, we may perhaps be excused for yielding to the request of the editor of the above-mentioned periodical to make an extract bearing upon the use of alcoholic beverages by vocalists. "Remembering," says the writer of an article upon stimulants, "that the winter session of our Society has already commenced, and that hundreds of musical evenings will be spent during the same, it may be well to add the words of one whose experience cannot be questioned and which may be most encouraging to those who are always so willing to exert their vocal powers on our behalf. In a letter to myself on the last day of October, Sims Reeves gives his opinion as follows: 'I cannot do better than to endorse every word Sir Garnet has written, and from my own experience I can safely affirm that stimulants are totally unnecessary, and singers generally are much better without them.' True to his mission, the editor of this Temperance periodical seems resolved to strengthen his case by calling other witnesses from the ranks of the musical profession; for he says, "Can any of our friends supply us with the names of any distinguished singers who are total abstainers?" What the answer to this question may be we cannot say; but we trust that the readers of the Church of England Temperance Chronicle will not jump to the conclusion that no vocalist can be a total abstainer unless he has so declared himself to his friends.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE three Concerts given in the course of the present month have brought the first part of the Crystal Palace season to a close. Henceforth pantomime will reign supreme, while Mr. Manns wields the bâton at Glasgow. At the first concert which falls under our notice (the 2nd ult.), Gounod's "Redemption" made its triumphal entry at Sydenham. As usual, that remarkable work excited an amount of interest all but unprecedented in our musical annals, the large concert-room of the Palace being filled almost to the last seat. It is a significant sign of the times, and speaks well for the development of musical taste in England, that the power of attracting the public at large, which formerly belonged exclusively to the prima donna or the virtuoso, has now been transferred to interesting works of modern growth. It would be unjust to compare the performance at the Crystal Palace with such exceptional renderings as those at Birmingham and, more recently, at the Albert Hall. The Crystal Palace choir is notoriously weak, and on this occasion was not always equal to the very moderate task which the French composer has set it. More satisfactory were the soloists. The names of Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Santley are too familiar in connection with this work to require further mention, and Mrs. Hutchinson fully satisfied those amongst the audience who had not heard Madame Albani. Madame Fasset and Miss Marian Fenna did their best with the minor parts assigned to them. The accompaniments and instrumental movements were throughout excellent. At the second Concert (the 9th ult.) Miss Arma Harkness repeated the success previously attained by her, the pieces selected being M. Saint-Saëns's effective Rondo Capriccioso in A (Op. 28) and a Polonaise by Wieniawski. The tenth Concert of the season (the 16th ult.) was conducted by Mr. F. H. Cowen, whose interesting Symphony in C minor, surnamed the "Scandinavian," formed the principal item of the programme. The work was admirably played and well received by the audience. Miss Emma Barnett on the same occasion gave a refined and accurate rendering of Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, to which she added three charming Impromptus for pianoforte alone, by her brother, Mr. J. F. Barnett.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

THE unprecedented attraction of Gounod's Oratorio "The Redemption" was again manifested at the Albert Hall on the afternoon of Saturday, the 9th ult., when a second performance of the work by the Albert Hall Choral Society was given. The audience was as large as that on the previous occasion, and the work was received with that reverent attention demanded by the character of the music. The principal vocalists were the same as those who appeared on the production of the Oratorio at the Birmingham Festival—Madame Albani, Madame Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley—Miss Edith Santley and Mr. Pyatt lending assistance in the subordinate parts. Increased effect was given to the important orchestral portions of the work by the addition of a number of stringed instruments; and the choir of boys was also largely reinforced, the choruses allotted to the Celestial Choir thus gaining an amount of power positively indispensable to the realisation of the composer's intention in so large a space. It is needless again to enlarge upon the exquisite and sympathetic rendering of the solos by singers already so identified with the music; but we may say that the whole of the choruses were sung with precision of tone and perfect unity of feeling, and with that minute attention to the expression of the words which evidenced increased familiarity with the music. All the instrumental movements—especially the March to Calvary, the representation of "Darkness" and the "Earthquake"—were finely played, and produced a profound impression upon the audience. Mr. Joseph Barnby—through whose untiring exertions the Oratorio has been so perfectly placed before a London public—conducted with such steadiness and accuracy as not only to commence the movements, but to preserve them throughout, in the time intended by the composer.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

The last evening Concert in November (27th), which we have still briefly to notice, opened with Beethoven's String Quartet in F major, Op. 59 (the first of the famous "Rasoumowski" set), and concluded with Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet in E flat (Op. 44), which, although only recently produced at one of the Saturday Concerts, was none the less welcome on that account, while in both instances it will suffice to add that the executants were Madame Norman-Néruda, MM. Ries, Holländer, and Piatti in the former, and Mdle. Janotha, in conjunction with the same artists, in the latter work. The gifted pianist gave as her solo performance Chopin's Polonaise in F sharp minor (Op. 44), which she played with that admirable verve characteristic of the lady's interpretation of the Polish composer. The vociferous applause and inevitable demands for an encore which followed this number were doubtless intensified by the fact of the present being the last appearance of the favourite pianist this season. Another instrumental solo was Madame Norman-Néruda's rendering of a Ballade in G minor for violin by Franz Néruda. Mr. Edward Lloyd, as usual, delighted his audience in songs by Gounod and Schubert. On the following Saturday afternoon (the 2nd ult.), Fräulein Dora Schirmacher was the pianist, and gave a very acceptable, albeit somewhat conventional, interpretation of Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata. No fault could be found with the young artist's executive skill, and a more pronounced individuality of style and depth of feeling she will probably develop in her progress. A want of experience in ensemble playing (which, however, may have been the result of nervousness) was likewise apparent in the lady's subsequent rendering, in conjunction with Madame Norman-Néruda and Signor Piatti, of Mozart's Pianoforte Trio in E major. The great violoncellist just named played in his best style an Allemande, Largo and Allegro, by Veracini, previously introduced by him at these Concerts. Other numbers in the programme were Schubert's masterly Quintet in C major (Op. 163), played to perfection by Madame Norman-Néruda, MM. Ries, Straus, Pezze and Piatti, and vocal solos, by Cowen and Massenet respectively, assigned to, and fairly well declaimed by, Miss de Fonblanque.

Herr Joachim's first appearance this season, at an earlier period than usual, was a special feature in the Concert of the 4th ult., and called forth the hearty demonstrations of welcome which this eminent and sympathetic artist invariably commands. An interesting programme had, moreover, been provided to mark what is justly looked upon as one of the chief "events" of the season, consisting of Beethoven's (Rasoumowski) Quartet, No. 3, Mendelssohn's Scherzo à Capriccio in F sharp minor for pianoforte alone, Bach's Violin Concerto in A minor, with double quartet accompaniment, and Mendelssohn's Overture in E flat for strings. Herr Joachim, as on previous occasions here, gave a fine interpretation of the solo part of Bach's noble work, one of a set of three of similar scope and purport, emanating presumably (for there is no absolute certainty about their date) from a comparatively early period of the master's career. The double quartet was ably sustained by MM. Ries, Pollitzer, Wiener, Zerbini, Straus, Zerbini, jun., Pezze, Reynolds and Piatti. In the rendering of the Rasoumowski Quartet, the leading violinist was supported by MM. Ries, Straus and Piatti—a familiar combination of sterling artists—the same gentlemen, with MM. Pollitzer, Wiener, Zerbini, and Pezze, co-operating in a capital rendering of that stupendous effort of precocious genius, Mendelssohn's Overture, which the composer wrote when a boy of fifteen. Fräulein Dora Schirmacher was again the pianist, and gave a spirited reading of the same composer's Scherzo above mentioned. Songs by Kjerulf and Taubert, and an air from Handel's "Rodolinda," "Thou shalt die," were contributed by Miss Carollita Elliot, who was much applauded. At the Saturday Concert of the same week (the 9th ult.) Herr Joachim again led in Mozart's well-known String Quartet in C major, No. 6—MM. Ries, Straus, and Piatti completing the party in this, as well as in Beethoven's Quartet in G major (Op. 18, No. 2), with which the Concert concluded. Fräulein Dora Schirmacher, who improves upon further hearing, achieved a decided success in her rendering of Beethoven's exacting Sonata in A flat (Op. 110), to which she added another piece in response to an encore. A leading feature in the programme was Herr Joachim's classical interpretation of the Adagio from Spohr's Eleventh Violin Concerto and the Caprice in E major by Paganini, which latter had to be repeated. The vocalist was Mr. Abercrombie, who, in an air by Handel and two of Mendelssohn's Lieder, displayed a good tenor voice of agreeable timbre, which, however, would be greatly improved if the singer could divest it of a somewhat pronounced throatiness.

The second Monday evening of the past month (the 11th ult.) included in its proceedings Mozart's String Quartet in G major, No. 1—the executants being the same as on the previous occasion— and Schubert's Pianoforte Trio in B flat (Op. 99), in which Madame Haas ably sustained the pianoforte part, those assigned to the strings being in the hands of MM. Joachim and Piatti. Solo performances were the lady pianist's characteristic interpretation of Chopin's Impromptu in F sharp major (Op. 36) and Herr Joachim's well-known masterly realisation of Tartini's fantastic Sonata entitled "Il Trillo del Diavolo," with pianoforte accompaniment. A Sarabande and Tambourin by Leclair was added by the great violinist in compliance with an encore. Mr. Santley contributed to the attractions of the programme by singing Sullivan's song "Thou'rt passing hence" and Schubert's "Erl King," the artist likewise submitting to the encore-tax. On the following Saturday afternoon (the 16th ult.) the programme was constituted as follows: Beethoven's String Quartet in D major (Op. 18, No. 2), the same composer's Pianoforte Trio in B flat (Op. 97), Chopin's Pianoforte Sonata in B minor (Op. 58), and Spohr's Duo Concertante in D minor (Op. 39) for two violins, the latter falling to the share of MM. Joachim and Straus, who also, in conjunction with MM. Ries and Piatti, formed the quartet party; Herr Pachmann (who was the pianist on this occasion), with MM. Joachim and Piatti, joining in the performance of the Trio. Miss Santley was the vocalist.

Herr Pachmann again presided at the pianoforte on the succeeding Monday (the 18th ult.), and created a veritable furor by his masterly interpretation of six Etudes from Op. 10 and Op. 25 by Chopin, a composer with whose idiosyncracies this artist appears to be emphatically en rapport. His phrasing is most delicate yet distinct, while the general refinement of his style has a decided claim to more than ordinary individuality. The Russian pianist also played the pianoforte part in Mozart's Quartet in G minor, in conjunction with MM. Joachim, Straus, and Piatti. Herr Joachim delighted his hearers with Spohr's Barcarole and Scherzo for violin solo, the Concert also including a capital rendering, on the part of the violinist just named and MM. Ries, Straus and Piatti, of Beethoven's Quartet in F minor (Op. 95). Miss Santley sang, with much grace and refinement, songs by Miss M. V. White, gaining hearty and well-merited applause.

Another Saturday afternoon Concert was announced to take place previous to the adjournment over Christmas, after which the performances will be resumed on the 6th inst.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S ACADEMY.

The pupils of this Academy gave their last Concert for the year in Steinway Hall, on the 14th ult., and attracted, as usual, a goodly gathering of friends and well-wishers. Four young ladies made a début on the occasion, but of these, two—Miss Fyffe Duff and Miss Scott—were amateurs, whose efforts had no public interest. Turning to the others, it is a duty to compliment Miss Marianne Walton and Miss Mary Willis upon a promising commencement of their public career. What the end may be rests, to some extent, with themselves, but it is clear that they have already profited much by the able teaching of their instructress. Among the students more or less familiar at these Concerts were Miss Florence Wallis, Miss Lord, Miss Killik and Miss Amy Carter, all of whom had prominent work to do, and gave satisfactory evidence of progress. Miss Wallis pleased greatly by her refined and artistic rendering of Mozart's "L'Addio," and Miss Lord showed much capacity of expression in Gounod's "There is a green hill." Miss Killik was asked to repeat her teacher's "I cannot forget"—a compliment to the singer as well as the song; and Miss Carter, in two songs by Schubert, "My resting place" and "The Post," confirmed the favourable impression made on former occasions by her good contralto voice and general artistic capacity. This young lady has the means of making way in her profession, and should begin to do so forthwith. The former pupils who took part in the Concert were Miss Adela Vernon—encored in a song by Jensen—and Miss Hilda Coward, whose bright voice and attractive style are always welcome. Several concerted pieces for female voices were sung by the students under M. Sainton's able direction; the proceedings being further varied by Mr. Arnold (pupil of M. Sainton), who played in capital style some Spanish Dances arranged for violin by Sarasate. Mr. Leopold was at the pianoforte.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

AN Orchestral Concert was given by the students of this institution on the 15th ult., at St. James's Hall, when two works of importance gave evidence of the progress of the pupils in composition, the first a "Concertstück" for pianoforte and orchestra, by Charles S. Macpherson, and the second a setting of the 137th Psalm, for soprano solo, chorus, orchestra and organ, by Mr. F. K. Hattersley (Balfie Scholar). The "Concertstück," the pianoforte part of which was played by the composer, exhibits much inventive power, the passages for the principal instrument being well woven in with the orchestra; and Mr. Hattersley's Psalm is written not only with a due appreciation of the character of the text, but with a more intimate knowledge of the effect of combined voices and instruments than might be expected of a student, the soprano solo, too (excellently sung by Miss Thudichum), being admirably expressive of the words. Brahms's new Pianoforte Concerto was divided between Miss Margaret Glyde and Miss Annie Mukle, two movements being assigned to each. Both pupils displayed talents in this difficult task which would do honour to pianists who have grown out of a music-school, and the warm applause they received was indeed fairly deserved. Amongst the vocal pieces, mention must be made of the excellent rendering of Weber's song, "O Araby," by Miss Alexandra Ehrenberg; and in Handel's "Ode for St. Cecilia's Day," which occupied the whole of what may be termed the second part of the Concert, the choral power of the Academy was shown to the utmost advantage, the solos being sung by Miss Kate Hardy, Miss Thudichum, Mr. Courtice Pounds and Mr. Dyved Lewis. An important feature in the Ode was the performance of a very clever additional organ accompaniment by Mr. W. Sewell (Novello Scholar). The Concert, which was in every respect highly successful, was conducted by Mr. William Shakespeare with his accustomed earnestness and precision.

MR. WILLING'S CHOIR.

It was inevitable that attempts would speedily be made to fill the gap occasioned by the death of the Sacred Harmonic Society, and we shall soon have two new bodies in place of the old one lost. Mr. Willing's Choir is first in the field, its opening Concert having been given in St. James's Hall on the 12th ult. We accord a hearty welcome to the young institution, and wish it "long continuance and increasing," provided the career worthily entered upon be continued in the same spirit. As is our feeling, so is that, we believe, of the musical public generally. Whatever faults English music-lovers may have, they are at least generous; always ready to encourage honest endeavour and give it a fair field. If, therefore, Mr. Willing's Choir should fail—absit omen—it may do so because there are too many candidates for public favour, but not by reason of indisposition to encourage its efforts. True, the audience at the opening Concert was rather thin; on the other hand, the weather made a dead set against success, and time is needed for busy London to become conscious of the fact that a new thing has arisen in its midst. Mr. Willing—whose self-transfer from the organ desk to the conductor's seat needs no apology—has now, or will soon have, the command of sufficient executive means. His orchestra, led by Mr. Carrodus, includes over sixty performers, all of whom are, we believe, of English birth, and, we know, of excellent capacity. The chorus numbers 150 voices, and includes many amateurs who belonged to the defunct society. Its qualities, therefore, are undeniable, but the number must be increased if the orchestra is to be properly balanced, and there is need for greater refinement of execution. A notion too largely prevails that chorus-singing in oratorio is more an affair of lungs than vocal skill. We are not surprised at the fact, seeing how we pride ourselves upon numbers and power in connection with this class of music. Amateurs, however, who have heard continental performances like those given at the recent Brussels Festival, recognise something better than mere force in the studiously varied expression and great delicacy which give to oratorios a new meaning and charm. Let us trust that Mr. Willing will educate his choir for chorus-singing with as much care as though they had to do with part-songs, and that he will insist upon a refined reading of all music in hand.

The programme opened with Handel's "Acis and Galatea," which was given with the additional accompaniments provided—rather in excess, some may think—by Sir Michael Costa. A series of accidents, against which no foresight could guard, damaged the rendering of Handel's charming Serenata. Mr. Lloyd, who had been announced to take the important part of Acis, was unwell, and could not attend. In his place appeared Mr. Frank Boyle, who completely broke down, left the platform, and handed his music over to the second tenor, Mr. Albert James. Mr. Boyle was decidedly out of voice, and matters were not improved by an awkward contretemps in his first song. As a natural result, when "Love in her eyes" came, his means failed him altogether. Some of the Acis music had to be omitted, but Mr. James did good service in the remainder, and obtained liberal applause for his readiness. The other soloists were Madame Marie Roze and Mr. Bridson. Of these, the lady showed but little acquaintance with the traditions of her part. Mr. Bridson, on the other hand, sang well, and made a "hit" with "O ruddier than the cherry." The chorus, as will have been gathered from previous remarks, lacked the delicacy and varied expression demanded by the music.

After the Serenata came Gade's "Psyche," composed for the late Birmingham Festival and presented to a London audience for the first time on this occasion. Our opinion of the work was so fully and decidedly expressed in connection with its Birmingham performance that there is no need to go over the same ground now. Nor are we called upon, as among those who account "Psyche" a beautiful thing, to combat a host of adverse opinions. On the merits of the Cantata there is substantial agreement, criticism in a few quarters being cool or hostile only because Herr Gade has not written according to the canons of the "advanced" school. This, let us say, is unreasonable. The advanced school may have extraordinary merits—which are not now in question—but a composer attached to the classic forms of his art is surely at liberty to exemplify them without cause of offence. There would be greater justice in urging that, delightful as is each number of the work both in a constructive and illustrative sense, it lacks sufficient contrast. The future of "Psyche" will, however, be little affected thereby, so great is its melodic charm and so highly finished its workmanship. Of the performance we can speak with some favour. M^{me}. Marie Roze, as Psyche, displayed the qualities which served her well at Birmingham; Miss Coward, Miss Rosse and Mr. Albert James sang the concerted music of the Zephyr and Genii admirably, while Mr. F. King sustained the arduous part of Eros in a manner that won general approval. The chorus had obviously been well prepared for the work they had to do; but the band would have gained much in finesse and refinement by another careful rehearsal. Drawbacks, nevertheless, were slight; the audience had "Psyche" fairly put before them, and the Cantata was a success, many numbers being received with frank applause, notwithstanding that the extreme length of the Concert must have tended to weariness long before the end arrived. Mr. Willing conducted steadily and well, at the same time copying the mannerisms of Sir Michael Costa with amusing fidelity to the original.

HIGHBURY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The present season of this now flourishing Society was inaugurated on November 27 by a performance of Gade's new Cantata, "Psyche." It was a bold undertaking on the part of an Association consisting mainly, if not exclusively, of amateurs both in the choir and orchestra, to attempt a work which on its production at the recent Birmingham Festival was supported by the highest professional aid; but Dr. Bridge, the able and energetic Conductor of the Society, had not miscalculated the powers of the forces under his command, and the result was a success, which—due allowance being made for the roughness of the orchestra and an occasional want of decision in the attack of the choir—reflected much credit upon all concerned. The choruses were sung throughout both with precision and dramatic effect, the good training of the Conductor being very apparent, as well as the commendable anxiety of every member of the choir to do justice to his teaching. Miss Marian Williams, to whom was entrusted the trying music of Psyche, sang nervously at first, but afterwards gained confidence and created a marked effect upon the audience. Mrs. Bradshaw McKay deserves the warmest praise for her rendering of the music of Proserpine, and Mrs. W. W. Burkinyoung and Miss Evelyn Gibson were thoroughly efficient in the trios for Zephyr and Genii. Mr. J. Bridson had evidently made a study of the part of Eros, and a good word must also be given for Mr. W. E. Smithett, who lent efficient aid in the trios already mentioned. The work was listened to with the deepest interest throughout; and at its conclusion the spontaneous marks of approbation from a crowded audience sufficiently proved how thoroughly the music had been appreciated. The second part of the programme commenced with an Overture, in F minor, by the late Sir John Goss, composed in 1825 for the London Philharmonic Society. The resuscitation of this excellently written and truly artistic composition at the recent Chester Festival, under the direction of Mr. Joseph C. Bridge, Organist of the cathedral, may be accepted as a hopeful sign of the times, and its performance on the present occasion was cordially welcomed by all who cling to the long-accepted forms of the great masters. The miscellaneous selection also included Gounod's "Ave Maria" (exceedingly well sung by Mrs. Burkinyoung), a promising Minuet and Trio by Mr. F. C. Woods, and the March and Chorus from "Tannhäuser." The Concert was conducted, with his usual skill and judgment, by Dr. Bridge.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY MUSICAL SOCIETY.

DURING the past term a series of five Chamber Concerts has been given on Wednesday evenings. These "Popular" Concerts were first organised in the Lent Term of 1876, and since then it has been usual to give a series of five or six Concerts during each of the two Winter Terms. The last series has been well attended. A very large portion of its success is due to Mr. R. Gompertz, the resident violinist, whose thoroughly artistic playing makes him an acquisition, such as few provincial towns are able to boast. Among the works performed may be specified Mr. Hubert Parry's Trio in E minor, played by Messrs. C. V. Stanford, R. Gompertz and C. Ould, on October 25; Mendelssohn's Trio in C minor, on November 8, when the pianoforte part was played by Mdle. Marie Würm; Schumann's Quartet in E flat, Op. 47, played on November 15 by Mr. J. A. Fuller-Maitland, Rev. F. Hudson, Mr. R. Gompertz and Rev. P. Hudson; Brahms's Quintet in F minor, Op. 34, and String Sextet in B flat, Op. 18, played on November 22.

The Choral and Orchestral Concert on the 2nd ult. was, according to the usual practice of the Society in its Michaelmas Term Concert, devoted chiefly to works of the older schools. The programme opened with Handel's Sixth Concerto for stringed instruments (in G minor). The orchestra was composed of the band that had been engaged for the performance of "Ajax" during the latter portion of the week, reinforced by amateurs. The remainder of the first part consisted of the Kyrie, Gloria and Credo from Palestrina's "Missa Papae Marcelli," and J. S. Bach's Cantata (written for the first Sunday after Easter) "Hold in remembrance Jesus Christ." It argued some boldness in the Society to attempt the production of two works of such importance and difficulty after only one term's practice; and that more practice might have been bestowed on them with advantage is a proposition that hardly needs to be stated. Still the performance was anything but discreditable. In winding its way through the curiously wrought web of Palestrina's unaccompanied six-part harmony, the intonation of the chorus was good, and the drop in pitch from the beginning of the Kyrie to the end of the Credo was less than a tone—a comparatively commendable result. The chief defect noticeable was an imperfect balance between the parts, a defect which, considering the peculiar constitution of the body of voices for which Palestrina wrote, it must always be difficult for modern choirs to avoid. The Quartet "Crucifixus" was sung by Miss Amy Aylward, Mrs. Dunn, Mr. W. A. J. Ford, and Mr. Herbert Thorndike. The Cantata of Bach was advertised on the programme as then performed for the first time in England. It deserves to be widely known. The number just before the final choral—an "Aria," which is really a dramatic dialogue between the basses tutti and the other three parts of the chorus—shows the composer at his grandest height. The incidental recitatives were sung by Mrs. Dunn, and the beautiful but difficult tenor solo "My Jesus hath arisen" was given with much taste by Mr. W. A. J. Ford.

The second part of the programme comprised a Symphony in D by P. E. Bach; Beethoven's Scene "Ah, perfido," sung by Miss Amy Aylward, whose performance was highly appreciated; and Stanford's Hymn (Op. 16) for baritone solo and chorus, "Awake, my heart." The last mentioned work was written for the London Church Choir Association in 1881. The accompaniment, originally written for organ, was scored for orchestra for the present occasion. It is a melodious and vigorous work, and is likely to become popular. The baritone solo was very effective in the hands of Mr. Thorndike.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MORE material cares and preparations connected with the Christmas Festival would seem to have interfered with the activity of our musical caterers in the early part of December, which was comparatively barren of interest for the more educated class of music-lovers, but Christmas itself was ushered in as usual with musical honours, including of course the time-honoured and indispensable performance of "The Messiah." Of the earlier events of the month the most important were the second of Messrs. Harrison's and the third of Mr. Stratton's serial Concerts, both "popular" in title and in fact, but with a difference which will be understood from their respective programmes. Before referring more particularly to these Concerts, however, a few words are due to the second of Mr. Stockley's orchestral performances which took place on November 30, too late for notice in my last.

The special feature of this Concert was Spohr's fourth Symphony "Die weihe der Töne," miscalled in English "The Power of Sound," which was given on this occasion for the second time in Birmingham. The performance on the whole was a very creditable one, wanting in parts a little more delicacy and refinement, but altogether irreproachable in spirit and balance of tone. The novelties of the Concert were Weber's melodious Clarinet Concerto in F minor, No. 1 (Op. 73), written in 1811 for the famous Bavarian clarinetist, Heinrich Barmann, and the "Sylvia" Ballet Suite for orchestra of Leo Délibes, the composer of "Le roi l'a dit." In the former work, which presents a somewhat unusual instrumental combination, the soloist was Mr. Pountney, who acquitted himself with great skill and effect. The Ballet Suite greatly delighted the audience by its picturesqueness, tunefulness, and piquant orchestration, and the graceful Scherzo scored for the strings pizzicato, with short colouring phrases for the wind instruments, pleased so much that the audience would fain have had it repeated. The vocalists were Mdle. Avigliana and Mr. Maas.

At Mr. Stratton's Chamber Concert on the 4th the novelty of the evening was a String Quartet in B flat, Op. 15, by Mr. Ebenezer Prout. Although composed in great part as far back as 1876, the quartet may fairly claim to rank as a new work, the slow movement having been written in 1880, and the entire composition revised last year. Although built to some extent upon the Haydn model, it reflects, in parts, the influence rather of Schumann than of Haydn, and is decidedly modern in spirit. It is an admirable example of quartet writing—graceful and characteristic in themes, symmetrical in form, and ingenious and masterly in the working out. Of the four movements of which it is composed, the most striking and original is the Scherzo, with its attendant trio, which was warmly applauded. Its performance by Messrs. Ward, Griffin, Abbott, and Owen was praiseworthy. Other items of interest were Beethoven's G major Sonata for pianoforte and violin (Op. 30, No. 3); Sterndale Bennett's Pianoforte Suite (Op. 28), in which Mr. Troman favourably impressed the audience by the vigour and articulateness of his playing; Schumann's E flat Quartet for piano and strings, which was by no means faultlessly rendered; and Beethoven's much neglected String Quintet in C major (Op. 29).

Messrs. Harrison's Concert on the following night attracted, as usual, an overflowing audience to the Town Hall, though there was not much of real musical interest in the programme. The performers were Madame Albani, Madame Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Frederic King, and Signor Foli, vocalists; and Herr Joachim, violin; Mr. R. Rickard, pianoforte; Mr. Stimpson, organ, and Mr. Zerbin, accompanist, in the instrumental department.

The Amateur Harmonic Association gave an interesting subscription concert on the 19th, at which the principal features were Mendelssohn's Forty-third Psalm, Mozart's "Ave Verum," Spohr's Eighth Psalm, and two movements from Max Bruch's Violin Concerto. The principals were Miss Clara Samuelli and Mr. Bridson, vocalists, and Mr. F. Ward, solo violin, and the choir, composed of the Association, under Mr. Stockley's direction, numbered 120 voices.

The Festival Choral Society's annual Christmas performance of the "Messiah" took place on the 26th, with Miss Samuelli, Miss Helen D'Alton, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Bridson as principal vocalists, and on the following evening the Philharmonic Union gave Hiller's "Song of Victory," Macfarren's "May Day," and a miscellaneous selection with Miss Anna Williams and Signor Foli as principals, and Dr. Swinnerton Heap conducting.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MUSICAL events here have been so crowded together during the last month that they have grievously interfered with each other. Bristol is not such a large place but that every one knows of certain definite musical fixtures which remain the same year after year, and it would be to their mutual advantage if the promoters of incidental Concerts would take these fixtures into consideration when arranging their own entertainments.

The Popular Concert on the 4th ult. was almost the only important one which had the field to itself, but the programme was not as interesting as usual, and the attendance was not large. Schumann's Symphony in D minor was the principal feature, and went fairly well. Mr. Carrington (leader) made his first appearance here as a solo violinist, in a rather dreary Caprice by Vieuxtemps; and Miss L. Phillips, a Bath lady, sang three songs in a finished style, giving so much satisfaction as to be engaged again for the following Concert.

On Wednesday, the 6th ult., a Concert was given at the Victoria Rooms in aid of the fund for paying off the debt on the Clifton College Chapel organ. Herr Joachim, Signor Piatti, and Miss Miller were the instrumentalists, and Miss Santley the vocalist. With such names as these on the programme it is scarcely necessary to say that the Concert was a success.

On Thursday, the 7th ult., the first of the three annual Advent Services in the Cathedral took place. The Anthem was Mendelssohn's "Come, let us sing," in which the solos were taken by members of the choir—the Rev. Precursor Mann conducting, and Mr. Risleley being at the organ. The Voluntary Choir, which augments the Cathedral Choir on these occasions, numbers 250, and has been working under Mr. Risleley for some months past. The tone is excellent, but the want of space in the choir of the Cathedral obliges a division of the voices, which considerably detracts from the general effect. This was the case both on the 7th and on the 14th ult., when the Anthem was "God, Thou art great" (Spohr); but at the third service (which takes place too late to be reported in this letter) the choir and full orchestra are concentrated in the nave—a far more favourable position. The service on that evening will consist of Spohr's great work, "The Last Judgment."

Mrs. Viner-Pomeroy's second Chamber Concert took place on the 14th ult., and the unfortunate coincidence with the Cathedral Service caused the audience to be even smaller than at the first one. Messrs. H. Holmes, Rice, W. H. Hill, J. Pomeroy, and Mrs. Viner-Pomeroy were the executants, as before, and the programme consisted of the Quartet in B flat (Mozart), Concerto for piano in D minor, with quartet accompaniment (J. S. Bach), Romance for violoncello solo (Rosenhain), and the Quartet in G major (Beethoven).

The last Popular Concert, on the 18th ult., clashed with two other musical events, a Christmas Carol Concert by members of the Festival Choir at the Victoria Rooms, and the Christmas Concert at Clifton College, both of which drew away many regular attendants at the Popular Concerts. The audience, notwithstanding, was larger than usual—partly, no doubt, owing to a rumour which has lately caused consternation both in Bristol and Clifton—i.e., that Mr. Risleley had been offered, and had accepted, a lucrative appointment elsewhere. The latter part of this report was contradicted by the announcement, on the programme of the 18th, that the Popular Concerts would be resumed on October 1, 1883, but it has certainly done Bristol some service in awakening her to a sense of the loss she would sustain in any such acceptance on the part of her most distinguished musician and conductor.

The programme of the last Concert was an exceptionally good one, embracing two such important compositions as Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and Mr. Villiers Stanford's symphonic Serenade (conducted by the composer), as well as several other works of considerable consequence, of which space forbids particular mention. Appended to the programme was a list of the principal works performed by Mr. Risleley's band from 1877 to 1882, thus appropriately ending a season which musically, if not financially, stands considerably higher than any of the foregoing ones.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE second Bradford Subscription Concert for this season, was given on November 24, the programme consisting of chamber and vocal music. Madame Norman-Néruda was the solo violinist, and played the Romanza and Scherzo from Franz Ries' Suite in F in a masterly manner, and also took the violin part in Schumann's Sonata in A minor for violin and pianoforte, Mr. Charles Hallé playing the latter instrument. Signor Piatti introduced Porpora's Sonata in F for the violoncello—a work which, though interpreted with wonderful intelligence and skill, appeared somewhat uninteresting on a first hearing. Miss Clara Samuelli contributed three songs, and, notwithstanding an attack of hoarseness, was entirely successful in pleasing those present. Herren Straus, Speelman, Bernhardt, and Neuwith were the other artists; and the other chief items in the programme were Beethoven's String Quintet in C, and Schubert's Piano Quintet in A, the latter of which was not only more successfully rendered, but also, as might be expected, much more to the taste of the audience.

The interest with which the production of a maiden work by Dr. Creser (the Organist of the Leeds Parish Church and the Conductor of the Leeds Choral Society) was regarded by his fellow townsmen, was evinced by the large audience present at the Leeds Assembly Rooms on November 28, when a first performance was given. The libretto, which is very well arranged, is founded on the story of Eudora, a maiden of Scio, who amidst the revelry of the marriage-day, is carried off by pirates, after seeing her lover slain, but in revenge fires the vessel, in which pirates and captives alike all perish. The work is entitled "Eudora, a dramatic Idyl," and consists of some sixteen numbers. The Overture was played from MSS. and does not appear in the published edition: it is of the type now generally adopted, introducing several subjects which occur in the work, and especially the theme of No. 12, of which excellent use is made. The first chorus opens with men's voices, followed by a subject for female voices, and concludes with the first subject harmonised—not too successfully—for full choir. After a short unaccompanied chorus is introduced an air for soprano, with a simple but pleasing theme; the effect, however, of the last note of the solo—on the major third of the key-note—being at once followed by the minor third on the strings, is by no means pleasing. No. 4 is a vigorous Bridal Chorus, in which some clever modulation appears. It is followed by a recitative and air for tenor, which is one of the best numbers in the work, the principal subject, in D major, being of a very bold and attractive nature, though the effect is somewhat marred by a weak concluding passage. An intermezzo precedes No. 6, unaccompanied chorus, in which the soprano part is so elaborated that the others sink into the insignificance of a mere accompaniment. Here again modulation is freely resorted to. No. 7 is an uninteresting arietta for contralto. No. 8 a characteristic Bacchanal chorus for men's voices, with perhaps only one serious fault, that of being too high in pitch for the voices. Nos. 9 and 10 contain nothing remarkable, but No. 11 is a tuneful duet for soprano and tenor, and No. 12 an exceedingly taking chorus of pirates, with a vigorous subject. After No. 13, chorus for female voices, comes a very difficult recitative and air for baritone, in which the instrumentation is excellent. The Finale is weak on the whole: the numerous unison passages are not effective and the subject is not a good one. The work contains a good deal of pleasing and scholarly writing, but is open throughout to the charge of being written too high for the voices, especially in the choruses for tenors and basses (as was painfully evident on its first performance). The frequent modulations to which Dr. Cresser resorts are on the whole not unpleasant, though some will be found difficult of execution by an ordinary chorus. The composer was loudly applauded at the conclusion of the work, and deserves to be congratulated upon the promise shown in his first important contribution to English music. At the same Concert Cowen's Birmingham work—"The Language of the Flowers"—was fairly well played by the band, and Mrs. Ash, an amateur whose singing would disgrace no professional artist, earned rounds of applause by a splendid rendering of Rossini's "Bel Raggio" ("Semiramide") and Meyerbeer's "Nobil Signor" ("Les Huguenots").

Mr. Midgley's first Chamber Concert at the Bradford Church Institute on the 8th ult. was poorly attended, notwithstanding the really excellent programme selected. The artists were Herr Straus (violin), Mr. J. Drake (viola), Mr. H. Smith (cello), Herr Neuwerth (contra-basso), and Mr. Midgley (piano); and the programme included Beethoven's Sonata in A minor for piano and violin, Goetz' Quintet in C minor, Bennett's "Maid of Orleans" Sonata, Spohr's Violin Barcarole, and Hummel's Quintet in D minor: all of these selections were performed with commendable taste, and especially the first, third and fourth items. We hope to see a much larger audience at Mr. Midgley's next Concert.

At the second Leeds Chamber Concert on the 12th ult., there was a marked improvement in the attendance, a fact which may be taken as indicating that there is now an increasing interest being shown in classical music in a district where, until lately, such concerts as the one under notice have almost always been poorly patronised. The executants engaged were Herr Holländer and Mr. J. W. Acomb (violin), Mr. W. H. Hill (viola), Mr. Charles Ould (cello), Mr. Alfred Broughton (solo pianist), and Mrs. Ash (vocalist). Schubert's String Quartet in A minor, and Schumann's Piano Quintet in E flat were the artistic triumphs of the evening, but Mrs. Ash's rendering of Mozart's great aria from "Il Seraglio," Mr. Broughton's execution of Beethoven's E flat Sonata (Op. 27, No. 1), and particularly Herr Holländer's violin solos—"Wien-iawski's" "Legende" and, "Capriccio"—certainly deserve special mention.

During the latter part of the month we have had more than the usual number of performances of the great Christmas Oratorio, Handel's "Messiah," but space will not permit us to give details of them.

Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" was given by the Pudsey (Leeds) Choral Union on the 3rd ult., and also by the Mosley (Leeds) Harmonic Society on the 17th ult.

A meeting of guarantors to the Leeds Musical Festival of 1883, was held on the 4th ult., at which the Provisional Committee submitted their report. In this it was stated that Dr. Macfarren had almost finished his new work, "King David": and that Mr. Joseph Barnby's "Ninety-seventh psalm" ("The Lord is King") was also approaching completion. Signor Verdi and Herr Niels Gade had been solicited to write new works, but had both declined on the score of want of time: Herr Raff had consented also to produce his new Oratorio, "The End of the World," under his own supervision at the next Leeds Festival, but his sudden death unfortunately caused the negotiations to be dropped: there is yet, however, a probability that the work may be heard. Mr. Frederic Clay is also engaged upon his new Cantata, "Sardanapalus"; in addition to these the committee have had offers of various other works. At the same meeting it was decided to set apart one-fourth of the profits from the forthcoming Musical Festival, to be retained as a reserve fund for future festivals, the remainder to be given, as on previous occasions, to the Leeds Medical Charities.

MUSIC AT CAMBRIDGE.

WHEN penny papers and the electric telegraph had been sometime busy in their work, it astonished the self-satisfied Londoner to be told that the provincial press, rather than the Times, was the political guide in Britain. We still flatter ourselves here, that in all matters connected with art we are oracles, and that as London is becoming more and more a musical centre in Europe itself, it would be an excess of condescension to notice the musical opinion of the provinces. But somehow, new musical works of importance come to us from the provinces; and meantime there is a great sameness in the routine and in the programmes of London Concerts. An over-confidence in our superiority, or an easier success due to the immensity of the population, may have made us callous to higher considerations; there being always one very necessary consideration concert-givers are obliged to regard. In University towns, like Oxford and Cambridge, there is, independently of the townsfolk, a special element, which may perhaps be as ready to patronise Mr. W. S. Gilbert as Sophocles; and would listen with equal pleasure to Offenbach and Palestrina. But in its corporate capacity, it is an element which, under fair conditions, might have an influence on art, that in respect to unity of purpose could not be equalled, in an overgrown and fluctuating population like that of the metropolis. It is only quite recently that the serious study of music has become a feature at the Universities, and already the results are most promising. We have two composers, Mr. Villiers Stanford and Mr. Hubert Parry, who may be said to have issued from their respective universities, if not colleges. There are other names, not yet so well known, which sooner or later must come to the front. We have before us a copy of the "proceedings in music" at the University of Cambridge. In that document are detailed the necessary requirements and qualifications for the admission of candidates for Degrees in Music. At present the art is still treated rather as an outsider; and the disadvantage must continue, until the condition of residency in the case both of professors and students is strictly enforced. The existing connection of music with the University seems to reside in the circumstance, that amongst the special subjects an advanced student is at liberty to select for examination, is music. It is not the music school that is wanted at a university. Royal Colleges, or Royal Academies, will answer better all technical purposes. In music, as in general education at a university, the advantage to be gained is not so much the absolute knowledge acquired as in living in an atmosphere of learning. From the universities there should radiate a spirit and a charm, not likely to be indigenous to music schools, open to both sexes and to all comers. In regard to church music, the college chapels at Oxford and Cambridge can and do emulate the good work of the cathedrals in former centuries. It is the only practical form in which efforts of that nature are likely to be concentrated in our day, when cathedral towns have many of them become road-side stations, and are outside the eddy, if not of modern thought, of the active world from which so many of the students of the universities come and return to. The study of church music inclines the student towards the more serious forms of composition in general, and we see its effect in the programmes of the Cambridge University Musical Society. With all our wealth of concert-giving in London, we have to take the train to Cambridge to hear Handel's Concerto Grosso No. 6, in G minor, for stringed instruments, or a symphony by Emmanuel Bach, sometimes credited with being the creator of the modern sonata. These less commonly heard compositions were given at the Society's concert at the Guildhall, Cambridge, on the evening of the 6th ult., under the direction of Mr. Villiers Stanford. A full report of the Concert will be found in another column. In regard to the merits of orchestra and singers we have only to add our mite of formal praise; and the same oblation would willingly be tendered to the organ, had the instrument half the power it possesses, or were the dimensions of the room quadrupled. It is the great vice of English musical taste at the present day to allow the finesse of the orchestra, and what expression there may be in the choral singing, to be overborne by a bellowing organ. At Cambridge, during the first week of December, they seem to have held a small festival. On the same day that the Concert took place, the last of a series of four performances of the "Ajax" of Sophocles, in the original tongue, was given at St. Andrew's Hall, now converted into a theatre, and further transformed for the occasion by the addition of an accurately-designed proscenium, a Thymele, and other accessories of the ancient Greek stage. The following particulars are worth quoting from the bills as a record of an event indirectly interesting to musicians as well as to students of the classics:—

The incidental music, written by Professor MACFARREN, is produced under the direction of C. V. STANFORD, M.A., Trinity College. The scenery and proscenium painted by Mr. JOHN O'CONNOR, from original authorities. The stage-management, costumes, and properties have been entrusted to CHARLES WALDSTEIN, M.A., King's College. The Chorus supplied by E. S. THOMPSON, M.A., Christ's College, and C. V. STANFORD, M.A., Trinity College. The dresses, armour, etc., by M.M. VINCENT BARTHE and LABRIAT, of London.

Stage Manager — CHARLES WALDSTEIN, M.A., King's College.

The scenery, costumes, accessories, and the performance have been universally and deservedly applauded; and one need not be a Person to enjoy the multitude of new as well as revived impressions inspired by such a representation. Setting aside the scholastic advantages to young or old, a more frequent performance of Greek dramas with all the luxury of scenic and musical auxiliaries would, sooner or later, influence the national artistic taste through the medium of aspiring dramatists and composers who are ever on the watch for new suggestions. The Opera itself owes its origin to revivals somewhat similar. The objection that "all that" has been tried and is done with, and that people are more interested in "Little Buttercups," and in "Four-and-twenty peers all in a row," than in long-winded declamations from protagonist or chorus, and so forth, is not quite to the point, as far as music is concerned at least. In witnessing a Greek play, the musician would not view it as a subject for direct imitation. To him the woes of Telemachus would suggest no specific musical delineation. The scenery of the Troad would to him be like any other blue outline of distant promontory, tawny shore, or purple sea. But somehow—and could he tell us how, there would be an end of it—his music reflects the ethos and atmosphere of period, place, and action; whilst in other respects it is still the music of Glück, or Wagner, or Caccini. The classical scholar and enthusiast cannot himself describe the emotions he experiences on reading a Greek play, any more than Gibbon could explain why he wept in the Colosseum; or more than any of us can analyse our feelings on entering Seville Cathedral, or King's College Chapel at Cambridge. It is the special province of the musician to seize and express the unanalysable; and it is very strange how little will set the machinery of the mill going in a composer's head. A new rhythm, a different accent, will sometimes suffice. Pedagogues at the universities may find that the artistic element they have invoked will react beneficially on scholastic points. It is not given to all composers to comprehend Greek accents and terminations, or even to place the right emphasis on particular words in a Greek line; but the effort to do so may lead to a reform in the pronunciation of Greek in our public schools. To any person musically endowed, it was obvious in the representation of "Ajax" at the Cambridge theatre, that Mr. Stephen who took the part of Ajax, and Mr. Macklin, who played Telemachus, either from special training, or some cause or another, pronounced Greek more as we are accustomed to hear it in foreign countries. In their mouths it sounded like a living language. It might be decried as "stagey Greek," but whatever it was, it differed amazingly from the mincing, south country English accent of the schoolboy's Greek. Mr. Stephen's delivery of the lines, where Ajax apostrophises the seas and woodlands of his native shore, and the streams of Scamander, was in itself a lesson to those who would treat the unoffending letter r as a needless intrusion in an alphabet.

In regard to the music it was the opinion of the best judges at Cambridge, that Dr. Macfarren had been most successful; and all the more so, that he did not affect the archaic, or any special tone-colouring, and wisely made the music subordinate to the main object—the dramatic representation of the play in the original language. Under those circumstances, the choruses did not sound differently—nor was there any reason that they should—from any chorus in unison in English opera; except that in many respects the music was more carefully and intelligently given by the Cambridge undergraduates than it would be by a common stage chorus. The orchestration was simple and effective, and all the more pleasurable that it did not remind us of Mendelssohn, whose setting of the "Antigone" and the "Œdipus at Colonus" might have invited imitation. Dr. Macfarren seems to have trusted to his own genius and sympathies, and to have employed a vacation in writing the music to "Ajax" as a pièce de circonstance, without intention of affecting the modern-antique, or of making any permanent addition to the musical classics. What Dr. Macfarren can do in the way of tone-colouring we have heard in the chorus of Ishmaelites in unison, in his Oratorio "Joseph." Apart from the Oriental character of the instrumental accompaniment to that chorus, the subject, whether accidentally or no, is a remarkable example of the Greek Phrygian mode; and from its commencing in as it were the octave mode D, and ending on B flat, the inversion of the final, it remains an historical and theoretical curiosity. There was little in the "Ajax" to remind us of anything so interesting; but the mellowness of the music was a pleasing feature in these days of tortuous phrasing, even if the "melos" was more redolent of the London footlights of some years ago than of the Athenian stage.

THE first Examination for the degree of Bachelor in Music at the University of Oxford will commence on Tuesday, February 13, 1883, at ten o'clock, in the Schools. Attention is directed to the following clause of the Statute (Statt. Univ., Tit. V. (VI.), Sect. The names of gentlemen who intend to present themselves will be received by Mr. Geo. Parker, the Clerk of the Schools, on or before Saturday, February 10, 1883, on payment of the statutable fee of £2. Candidates who are not already Members of the University must matriculate before the day of examination. Subjects of Examination:—Harmony and Counterpoint, in not more than four parts. Text Books, Ouseley's "Treatise on Harmony" and his "Treatise on Counterpoint, Canon, and Fugue."

HERREN LAISTNER, MAHR and LEU commenced the third season of their Trio-Concerts on Thursday, the 14th ult., at the Royal Academy Concert Room, before a select and attentive audience. Schubert's celebrated Trio in E flat, and a Trio by Dvorák, were the pièces de résistance of the evening, and were performed with perfect execution and much refinement and feeling. Amongst the solo pieces special mention must be made of Herr Laistner for his excellent rendering of Beethoven's Waldstein Sonata. Herr Mahr played, for the first time in this country, a Fantasia of his own—a theme from Wagner's newest drama, "Parsifal," called "Charfreitags Zauber." This beautiful melody found so much favour with the audience that it had to be repeated. Fräulein Thekla Friedländer sang some songs by Brahms, Rubinstein, and Kjerulf in her usual artistic style. We are glad to notice the commencement of these Trio-Concerts, and hope they will steadily gain the favour of all music-loving amateurs. The second Concert is to take place at the same room on the 25th inst., when Brahms's new Trio will be performed for the first time in England.

THE members of the Cecilia Musical Society gave their first Concert of the season in the West Hackney School-rooms on the 5th ult. The Choral portions of the programme included Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," the solo in which was divided between Miss Oxenham and Miss Marian Jones, Eaton Fanning's "Song of the Vikings," "The dawn of day," and other part songs, all of which were well rendered, under the able conductorship of Signor de Barathay. Mr. Arthur Tattersall's anthem "Ponder my words," and Mr. Davies's part-song, "It was a lover and his lass," were sung by the Guildhall Choir, under the direction of Mr. Weist Hill. The solo in the anthem was admirably sung by Mr. George Tattersall, who also rendered great assistance in the concerted pieces. Mr. Ernest Crooke's violin solos were a feature in the programme, and Miss Glynn's pianoforte playing was highly appreciated. The Society has in rehearsal A. C. Mackenzie's Cantata, "The Bride."

A CONCERT, under the direction of Mr. Charles Oberthür, took place on Monday evening the 11th ult., at the Royal Victoria Coffee Hall, Mr. Oberthür's Cantata, "The Red Cross Knight," sung by the South Kensington Ladies' Choir, under the guidance of Mrs. Arthur O'Leary, being announced as the chief attraction. Miss Howes, the principal soprano, has a fine and well-trained voice, which she uses with much artistic feeling, and her efforts were highly appreciated. Miss Mackness played a "Morceau de Concert" for the pianoforte, on a popular air, by Arthur O'Leary, which was much applauded, and the Concert-giver performed various harp solos of his own composition (including a duet with his pupil, Miss Fortescue) with his well-known skill. Fräulein Kaysel and Signor Villa also assisted.

AN exercise for the degree of Doctor in Music, composed by Mr. H. A. Harding, Mus. Bac., and consisting of a short Oratorio, "St. Thomas," was performed in the Sheldonian Theatre, on Wednesday, the 6th ult. The principal solo vocalists were Miss Jessie Griffin, Mr. Robson and Mr. Bonell, the chorus being composed of members of New College and other choirs. The band comprised many local and other performers, and was very ably led by Mr. A. Burnett; Mr. Harding conducting. There was a very large attendance of the public, and among those present were the Vice-Chancellor and the Professor of Music (Sir F. Gore Ouseley, Bart.). The composition is one of special merit, several of the numbers contained in it displaying musical capacity of a high order. It was received with much favour throughout, and at its conclusion Mr. Harding was most heartily cheered.

MR. T. G. BAINES, Organist of St. Margaret's, Westminster, gave an organ recital at Wycliffe Chapel, on Tuesday, the 5th ult., his programme including selections from Mendelssohn's "Athalie," Spohr's Adagio from "Quartet in G minor," Viviani's "March of the Silver Trumpets," Concerto by Corelli, and "On mighty pens" ("Creation.") Miss Marian Borallack was the solo pianist, and played a piece by Michael Watson, on "Home, sweet home"; and, with Mr. Baines at the organ, a paraphrase on Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise." The vocalists were Miss Alice Hall, R.A.M., and the Wycliffe Chapel Choir, under the direction of the Choirmaster, Mr. George Merritt. A new stop has been added to the instrument by Messrs. Jones and Son. Mr. G. E. Hedges, the Chapel Organist, accompanied the vocal pieces.

MR. WINDYER CLARK provided a programme of much variety and interest for his Concert at Ladbroke Hall, Notting Hill, on the 5th ult., when his newly-formed Choir appeared for the first time, and made a very favourable impression on the large audience assembled. An important feature of the evening was the concert-giver's admirable Pianoforte and Mustel-organ playing, on both of which instruments he proved himself an able performer. Valuable assistance was given by the principal vocalists, Miss C. Thudichum, Miss Ada Iggulden and Mr. Dyed Lewis, and by Miss Helen De Lisle (violin), and Mr. R. H. Tompkins (flute). The accompanists were Mr. R. Stokoe, Mus. Bac. and Mr. C. W. Pearce, Mus. Bac.; Mr. Arthur O'Leary, accompanying his own song "He roamed in the forest," sung by Miss Iggulden.

THE Belle Sauvage Glee Union held its usual monthly Smoking Concert at Anderson's Hotel on the 7th ult., Mr. J. F. Wilson in the chair. The part-songs included Bishop's "What shall he have" and "Hart and Hind," Hatton's "Summer Eve" and "Stars of the summer night," "The Young Musicians," "Dr. St. Paul," and "Dame Durden." Mr. J. H. Müllerhausen, Mr. F. Crowest, Mr. Syckelmoore, Mr. H. E. Vickers, Mr. R. Flegg, and Mr. A. J. Turnbull were the soloists, the three first-named deservedly receiving encores. Mr. H. Judd (who also gained an encore), Mr. G. J. Quilter, and Mr. Wicks contributed humorous songs.

A SACRED Historical Cantata entitled "The Victories of Judah after the Captivity," was performed by a large choir at Camberwell Green Congregational Church, on Thursday, November 30. The solos were taken by Miss Spinke, Miss France, Mr. F. Rook and Mr. F. Tapner. Mr. E. Franklin Rook presided at the organ and Mr. George Shinn, Mus. Bac. (composer of the work) conducted. Mr. T. Duncan Bell, was the Reader. The performance was highly satisfactory.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER and CO. purchased at the recent sale of the Sacred Harmonic Society the plates and copyright of the arrangement and English version by Arthur Matthison of "Moses in Egypt;" also the MS. full score made for the Society, with the wind parts, of Dr. Crotch's "Palestine."

WE have authority for stating that it is in contemplation to have a Special Service at Westminster Abbey before Easter, at which Gounod's Oratorio "The Redemption" will be performed, with full orchestra.

THE Crouch End Choral Society gave its first Concert of the present season at Christ Church Schoolroom, Crouch End, on Tuesday, the 19th ult. The programme consisted of Birch's Operetta, "The Merrie Men of Sherwood Forest," and a miscellaneous selection, the artists being Miss Alice Parry, Mr. Charles Chillely, and Mr. Egbert Roberts, all of whom acquitted themselves to the satisfaction of the audience. Mr. Edmund Woolhouse contributed a violoncello solo—Tarantelle by Popper—which was loudly encored. The band was led by Mr. S. Dean Grimson, Mr. Charles W. Lovejoy presided at the piano, and Mr. Alfred J. Dye conducted. The second Concert is announced for February 6, when Alfred R. Gaul's "Holy City" and a miscellaneous selection will be performed.

THE third and last of the second series of concerts given by Miss Alice Aloof, at Brixton Hall, took place on Tuesday evening, the 12th ult., in the presence of a numerous audience. The subjects chosen by the bénéficiaire (whose artistic pianoforte playing elicited well deserved applause) included Chopin's Valse in F. Op. 34, No. 3; the same composer's Nocturne in E flat, Op. 9; and Weber's Polacca Brillante in E major, Op. 72. Miss Aloof was successfully associated with Mr. E. Crooke in Beethoven's Sonata in A, Op. 47 (dedicated to Kreutzer), and with Mr. John Harrison, in Raff's Tarantella in D minor. Especial praise is due to Mr. E. Crooke, for his violin solo Zigeunerweisen (Sarasate), and also to the vocalists, Miss Annie Butterworth and Mr. James Budd.

AN evening Concert was given by the Bromley and Plaistow Choral Society on Tuesday evening, the 19th ult., when a programme, consisting of Spohr's "Last Judgment" and Cowen's "Rose Maiden," was excellently performed. The following singers and instrumentalists assisted: Miss Margaret Hoare, Miss G. Hallpike, Mr. H. Parkin, Mr. Lewis Thomas, Mr. F. W. Partridge, and Mr. W. Henry Thomas. The choral singing was perhaps the chief feature in the evening's entertainment, given, it should be said, in aid of the District Visiting Societies. Mr. F. Lewis Thomas conducted with skill and judgment.

IN our last number we noticed the production of the first part of Gounod's Oratorio "The Redemption" at the Church of St. Margaret Pattens, Rood Lane, Fenchurch Street. The remaining portions of the Oratorio have since been given—the second part on the evening of Friday, the 1st ult., and the third part on Friday, the 15th ult. Mr. Theodore Drew was again at the organ, and Mr. Stedman conducted. The soloists were the same as in the performance of the first part, excepting that the words ascribed in the Oratorio to the Saviour were sung by Mr. Barrington Foote. On both occasions the church was crowded. The suitability of Gounod's Oratorio to musical services in churches is now fully recognised.

A SUBSCRIPTION "Smoking Concert," with an unusually attractive programme, was given at the Cannon Street Hotel on the 12th ult. Several part-songs were excellently sung and warmly received, amongst which must be mentioned Mr. Berthold Tours's melodious and highly effective "Hymn to Cynthia," Müller's popular "Maying," and Benedict's "Hunting Chorus," from the "Lily of Killarney." Songs were contributed by Mr. W. G. Forington, Mr. Arthur Thompson, and Mr. Herbert Schartau (several of which were encored); and the solos of Mr. Fountain Meen on the pianoforte, and of Mr. Arthur Payne on the violin, were conspicuous features in the selection. Mr. Fountain Meen was an able accompanist.

TWO Recitals on the new organ built for Shanghai Cathedral by Messrs. J. W. Walker and Sons, and just finished, have been given during the past month at their factory, Francis Street, W.C., namely, on the 12th by Dr. Bridge and on the following day by Dr. F. E. Gladstone. Dr. Bridge's programme included Bach's Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Merkel's Double Fugue in A, and Schumann's "Four Sketches" (Op. 58); while that of Dr. Gladstone comprised Mendelssohn's Third Sonata, Bach's Toccata and Fugue in F, and several other pieces of equal interest, which were much appreciated.

AN excellent Concert was given at All Saints' Institute, Hatcham Park, on the 11th ult. The programme was attractive and well selected, and much talent was displayed both in the vocal and instrumental department. Miss Clara Walker, who commenced the Concert, played with a firm touch and facile execution Weber's "Moto Continuo," and afterwards joined her sister Agnes in a four-handed arrangement of Nicolai's Overture to the "Merry Wives of Windsor"; Miss Louisa Pyne gave with much brilliancy an effective Fantasia on Scotch airs, and Miss Rose Moss, Miss Minnie Gwynne, Miss Annie Gertrude Cole, and several others, contributed vocal solos with much effect.

AT a meeting of the Society of Professional Musicians, held at Liverpool on the 2nd ult., Dr. Allison read a paper "On the Registration of Teachers," in which he earnestly advocated the desirability of endeavouring to obtain an Act of Parliament for the registration of teachers of music. After a discussion the following resolution was carried: "That it be an instruction to the Council of the Society of Professional Musicians to confer upon and submit to an early meeting of the Society a scheme for bringing the subject of the legal registration of teachers of music before members of Parliament, with a view to legislative action."

MR. HENRY CARTE (of the firm of Rudall, Carte and Company) announces his intention of publishing, by subscription, ten original Sonatas for the pianoforte, to be written by the following eminent composers: Dr. Ferdinand Hiller, Herren Gade, Grieg, Reinecke and Dvorák, Sir J. Benedict, Professor Macfarren, Mr. C. E. Stephens, Mr. J. F. Barnett, and Mr. Villiers Stanford. An undertaking of such real benefit to modern art is deserving of the warmest patronage from all who would wish to preserve that classical form of composition which has already produced such imperishable masterpieces.

MR. T. LAWRENCE gave an excellent Concert at the South London Institute of Music, Camberwell, on Tuesday evening, November 28. The programme included Haydn's Quartet in D, Op. 64, No. 5 (Messrs. T. Lawrence, H. Lewis, W. V. Waud and J. E. Hambleton), Mozart's Trio in E flat, Op. 14, No. 2 (Messrs. Julian Egerton, Lawrence, and Miss H. Hann), and Romberg's "Toy Symphony." A hearty reception was accorded to the bénéficiaire for his viola solo, Taglichsbeck's "Concert Stück," and to Mr. J. Radcliff for his flute solo. The vocalists were Miss Clara Leighton and Mr. Thurley Beale.

A RECITAL on the grand organ in the Crystal Palace was given by M. Alex. Guilmant on the afternoon of Tuesday, the 5th ult. The increasing popularity which M. Guilmant's organ works are gaining in this country added, no doubt, to the interest of the Recital, and several times the performer, who was most warmly received, narrowly escaped an encore, but Lemmens' attractive "Fanfare" was undeniably redemanded, and repeated accordingly. Handel's Second Concerto in B flat, Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D minor, and M. Guilmant's own "Grand Chœur" were among the chief items of the Recital.

SPOHR'S "Last Judgment" was given in its entirety at the Special Advent Service held in St. Paul's Cathedral on Tuesday evening, the 5th ult. The solos were taken by two of the Cathedral choristers (treble), Mr. Hanson (tenor), and Mr. Kempton (bass), Dr. Stainer presiding at the organ. The good example set by the Cathedral is being followed by several churches in the metropolis, and we observe that the same Oratorio was given at St. Stephen's Church, Westminster, on the following evening, and at St. Paul's, Bow Common, on the 15th ult., the latter under the direction of Mr. Horace Buttery.

THE professors and students of the London Conservatoire of Music gave a Concert at Burlington Hall on Saturday, the 16th ult., in compliment to their Principal, Mr. Lansdowne Cottell. After the first part of the programme, the Chairman (H. Schlesinger, Esq.), in a complimentary speech, presented Mr. Cottell with a testimonial, on behalf of the students, consisting of a centre-piece, a couple of epergnes, and two candelabras, all executed in solid silver. Mr. Cottell replied in appropriate terms, and the second part of the Concert was then proceeded with.

GOUNOD's "Redemption" was performed in Reading, on Tuesday, the 20th ult., by the Philharmonic Society, when the Grand Hall was filled with a critical and appreciative audience. The artists were Miss José Sherrington, Miss Helen D'Alton, Mr. Bernard Lane and Mr. Thurlay Beale. The band was led by Mr. A. Burnett. The singing of the choir showed that much care had been taken with the rehearsals, and the great beauty of the words was enhanced by delicate and refined expression, the brilliancy of the sopranos being especially noticeable. Miss José Sherrington sang well, especially in the lovely solo with chorus "From Thy love as a Father." Miss Helen D'Alton, Mr. Bernard Lane and Mr. Thurlay Beale also acquitted themselves well. Among the choruses, "Now behold ye the guard" and the grand chorus "Unfold, ye portals everlasting" were especially deserving of mention. The band and chorus consisted of 250 members. Mr. J. C. B. Tirburt presided at the organ, and Mr. W. H. Strickland was an able Conductor.

THE next Organ Recital at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, will be given on Thursday evening, the 11th inst., by Mr. Edwin Evans, F.C.O.

THE Bloomsbury Choral Association gave its first concert on the 9th ult., at the Schoolroom, Richmond Street, Maida Hill. Songs were sung by Miss Kenny, Miss K. Kenny, and the Conductor, the two ladies also playing three pianoforte duets by Raff and Mendelssohn. Mr. J. W. Hill played Weber's Concertino in E flat for the clarinet and a fantasia on Scotch airs. Mr. W. G. W. Goodworth, L.Mus.T.C.L., acted as conductor.

THE new parish church of St. Mary Matfelon, Whitechapel, was reopened on Friday, the 1st ult. An interesting Organ Recital was given in the afternoon by Dr. Bridge on the new organ erected by Messrs. Conacher, of Huddersfield, the tone and general qualities of the instrument eliciting great satisfaction.

THE Annual Dedication Festival will be held at St. Paul's Cathedral on Thursday afternoon, the 25th inst., when the customary selection from Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" will be given. Mr. Myles B. Foster's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in A, scored for orchestra, is the Service selected.

REVIEWS.

Françoise de Rimini. Opéra en quatre actes. Paroles de MM. Jules Barbier and Michel Carré, Musique de Ambroise Thomas. [Paris: Heugel et Fils.]

A FEW bars of Andante maestoso in F minor, with solemn ff harmonies for the brass, short detached phrases like cries of pain, and low mutterings for the drums, precede the rising of the curtain upon the prologue to this Opera. The scene is the Gate of Hell, above which gleams in fiery letters, the well-known words, now sung in unison by an invisible choir of bass voices. When the voices cease, the orchestra continues its wailing, the stage remaining empty. A "long silence" is followed by an Andante con moto, which repeats in various positions a one-bar subject:—

As it closes Dante enters, the inscription above the portal fading from sight. The poet has lost his way, and, in broken, agitated phrases, tells of sights and sounds of fear. Then the music changes to an Andante sostenuto of pure melodic beauty and gentle expression. It precedes the entrance of Virgil, whose representative theme we may take the opening subject to be:—

This charming and too short movement ended, Virgil appears, and begins a dialogue with Dante, which closes with their entrance into the infernal regions, the one as guide, the other as visitor. As they approach the gate, the invisible chorus of basses again proclaims, "All hope abandon, ye who enter here." The dialogue is, musically speaking, much broken up. One short air relieves it, and the Virgil theme appears and reappears as a kind of central thought.

The scene changes to the "first circle of hell," where we hear a "symphony and chorus of the damned," sung as Virgil and Dante appear in a boat on the infernal river. Detached phrases are sung by the choral parts, each describing some form of torment, and, as may be supposed, the music is wild and weird. Presently an orchestral allegro moderato begins—and is extended in harmony with its opening bars, if not with the situation, till once more the voices enter with their direful complainings, and their curses of the god who has condemned them to eternal torture. Dante expresses the fear and horror of one who looks upon such a scene, and then, as the strings flutter downward from the heights of their scale, sees two souls flying through the air. From Virgil he learns that they are the souls of Francesca and Paolo. Dante, at his companion's bidding, calls to them; they alight upon a rock, and receive his eager queries as to their fate and its reasons. The two souls, in short and simple, but somewhat imitative passages, plead that a renewal of their story augments their sufferings. They essay, nevertheless, to begin the narrative, but break down amid mournful wailings, and finally disappear. Dante then enquires of Virgil as to their history, and the Roman poet promises that the whole shall forthwith be enacted before his eyes. At this point the curtain falls, and the Prologue ends.

The first Act opens in a Byzantine oratory at Rimini, and is preceded by a short andantino, light in structure and effect; simple withal and pretty. Francesca and Paolo are reading from the same book the legend of Lancelot and Guinevere. They alternate their sentences while the charming phrases of the andantino go on in accompaniment, and presently, moved by the tale, Francesca kisses Paolo as Guinevere embraced her knight. This act of avowal naturally leads to a love duet of the most passionate description, and, in our opinion, one of M. Thomas's best efforts. Its character can be gathered from the opening vocal sentence:—

The duet is for some time continued in antiphon, but eventually the voices join in a lengthened coda, which, sometimes in imitation, sometimes in unison, reproduces the opening theme. Melodious and well-worked out in a style essentially French, this number belongs to the successes of the opera. At its close, Francesca's father, Guido, enters to tell that the Guelphs have triumphed "all along the line," and now threaten Rimini itself, whose populace seem unwilling to resist. Francesca seizes this moment to proclaim her love for Paolo; Guido approves it, and counsels both of them to fly from the approaching foe, warning Paolo that the Guelphs are bringing his banished brother Malatesta to wreak vengeance for the past. Hereupon the scene ends with a patriotic ensemble. In this section of the work much of the music is descriptive of the strong emotions of rage and despair, without going beyond the form and limits of the conventional. When, however, Francesca declares her love, we at once recognise the beautiful. Her andantino is full of tender expression and musical charm, heightened by contrast with the tempestuous passages preceding. Guido answers in the same spirit, and the entire episode is delightful. On its part, the patriotic trio glows with vigorous feeling and ends the scene amid genuine excitement. The next scene is laid on the ramparts of Rimini, where the populace are assembled in fear, proclaiming that all is over with them and that Malatesta has sworn to burn the city. They demand a capitulation, while the soldiers are disposed to go over to the enemy. This choral number, wherein three distinct choirs participate, is largely extended and carried on with sustained energy. Sooth to say, however, much of it is commonplace, by far the best portion being the Chorus of Soldiers, "Servons l'Empereur." The ensemble is interrupted by a remonstrance from a young man, Ascanio (mezzo-soprano), who, in some admirably sarcastic phrases, taunts the crowd with cowardice. He, however, is brushed aside as a child or a fool, the Chorus resuming till Paolo enters and tries to kindle some spark of courage with a war-song:—

The strain is full of life and energy, but it is sung to no purpose, and the ensemble continues as Ascanio, from a position of vantage, describes the approach of the enemy to the gates and the surrender of the keys. This news is received by the cowardly citizens with profound alarm, but by the soldiers with indifference, while Paolo, having inquired the name of Ascanio, tells the rest that they should humble themselves before the only one who has proved himself a man. The Finale now begins with the entry of Malatesta at the head of the imperial troops. The brothers recognise each other, and Paolo defies Malatesta to such revenge as he chooses to take. Francesca rushes between them; the conqueror, struck by her charms, pardons all for her sake, but retains her as a hostage in the city. Paolo, accompanied by Ascanio, departs to renew the struggle elsewhere, and the curtain falls upon a song of triumph. As may be supposed, the Finale abounds in concerted music of an energetic and rather tumultuous character. For this reason, looking at what has gone before, the act is wanting in variety and contrast. One quickly tires of singing crowds, especially when the action is slow and slight. True, the dialogue between the brothers and between Malatesta and Guido, with reference to his daughter, affords some relief and has points of high musical interest, but we may marvel that Francesca, save in the ensemble, has no more than a few words to say. She is brought on the stage and there, in an important sense, wasted.

The second act opens in a grand gallery connecting a chapel with the palace of Malatesta. After a brief orchestral andante in two parts only Francesca enters dressed as a bride, and accompanied by her father. She is about to marry Malatesta, but revolts from the sacrifice, even when Guido pleads that she would thereby ransom her fellow-citizens from oppression. Moreover, she refuses to believe in the report of Paolo's death, till Ascanio enters and declares that he had received his master's last sigh upon the field of battle. Overcome with bitter feeling, Francesca protests that she is about to sacrifice her heart and life for the good of her country. The important musical feature in this scene is a trio, "O funeste journée," which M. Thomas has extended to considerable length, without observing any recognised form. Its expression varies from the marziale with which Ascanio tells how he went to battle with his lord, to the pathos of the message the dying man had charged him to deliver; and the whole effect is intensely dramatic. We may question, indeed, whether the opera contains, in this respect, a finer number, or one written with greater command of resource. At the close of the trio, a nuptial chorus begins, with a conspicuous orchestral accompaniment having the subjoined as its pervading feature:—

The chorus is brief and so pretty that we wish it longer, especially as, when it ends, Malatesta appears, saluting the company and his bride, whom he further proceeds to address in an air, "J'espère! je vous aime." As might be expected, the song is unattractive, and a return to the nuptial chorus affords general relief. At its close a short and simple but pleasing Andante for organ accompanies the advance of the procession to the chapel. Ascanio is left alone in the gallery, and there, while the organ piece continues, he laments the master supposed to be dead, and asks pardon for Francesca, who loves him still. A band of pages enter from the chapel at this point, bringing relief from overstrained feeling with them. They rally Ascanio upon his downcast looks, sing a bright two-part chorus of the most joyous character, and exceunt laughing merrily. A more serious incident supervenes. Paolo, who did not die, appears, weak and wounded, but not so far gone that he is unable to sing a Cavatina, "Mais non! J'en crois ton doux oracle"—one of the most tender and touching things in the Opera—

Mais non, mais non, J'en crois ton doux ora-cle.

The whole song is characteristic of the composer in his most emotional vein, and, if it lack depth, wants nothing of tender grace. At its close, Ascanio comes out of the chapel, and a glad recognition takes place at the moment when the choir within proclaims the union of Francesca and Malatesta. Attracted by the music, Paolo looks into the chapel, and in a frenzy proclaims "Treason!" invokes death; tries to tear open his wounds and falls senseless at the moment when the bridal procession reappears. All gather round the prostrate figure, Malatesta confounded and enraged, Guido hopeful, and determined to appeal to the Emperor in person, Francesca in an agony of love, which receives expression through a final air "Il vit, celui que j'ai pleuré."

The third act is laid in the Salle des Fêtes of Malatesta's palace and begins, after a lightsome orchestral movement, with a soliloquy for the new-made bridegroom, in which he protests that glory and honour are as nothing compared to the love Francesca gives to his brother. This brings in an aria, "Ton front charmant," variously but always strongly expressive, while not going outside the limits of simplicity. Malatesta, lament as he may, cannot excite our compassion; nevertheless, a good artist may depend upon this piece to "bring down the house." At its close Francesca enters and, seeing her husband, is about to retire. Malatesta detains her, and a dialogue ensues, in which he tries to calm her fears by assurances of pardon for Paolo, and asks her to smile on him. Francesca retorts that her soul, at least, has not been bought; and when Malatesta has cautioned her not to offend against his love, a joyous chorus, "L'Italie en fêre," is heard from behind the scenes, preliminary to the entrance of Francesca's cortège. It is twice interrupted by episodic passages for solo voices or orchestra, and when it ends the ballet-divertissement begins. The opening numbers of this part of the work employ the voice as well as instruments. Thus, Ascanio sings some couplets, "Venez des pays d'alentour," which are in M. Thomas's prettiest and most attractive manner. Ascanio takes part, likewise, in a Barcarole, "Après le fleur," and again in a Pantomime and Recit. Next comes a Valse, in which the first sopranos, tenors, Ascanio, and finally the full chorus have a share. This, too, is characteristic of a composer who knows how, in such music, to charm every ear. The purely instrumental dance-music follows, and consists of an Adagio, Scherzo, Capriccio, Pas de Six, Habanera, Saltarelle, and Sevillana. We recommend these pieces to the attention of amateurs who love ballet music, because, even as arranged for piano, they are pretty and artistic. The dances are interrupted by a clamorous noise without; pages rush upon the scene in alarm, and voices exclaim "Death to Malatesta." The whilom conqueror of Rimini draws his sword, and his followers close around him as Guido, Paolo, Ascanio, and a mob of German cavaliers and Italian townspeople enter. Guido loses no time in proclaiming that he brings a message from the Emperor, which is to the effect that Malatesta must appear at Court to answer for his abuse of power. The melodramatic music attending all this need not detain us, but the following ensemble, in which the adherents of Guido, the friends of Malatesta, and the principal personages have distinct and important parts, is one of the most striking and well-developed numbers in the work. Better than anything else it shows M. Thomas's method of dealing with masses—and displays it, we must add, to great advantage. At its close, Malatesta professes obedience to his master, and, with sinister purpose, confides Francesca to the care of his brother Paolo. Another ensemble, more impressive if not so masterly, ends the act with a manifestation of conflicting passions.

The fourth act, preceded by a sombre orchestral Andante which seems like the shadow of coming fate, opens in one of the rooms of the palace. Francesca is alone, dreaming of her lover and cherishing her now sinful love, when she sees on a table the book containing the Arthurian legend. A song follows—"Ce livre est toute notre histoire"—expressive of the conflict between passion and widely duty. This is a remarkable number, quite in the unconventional style M. Thomas affects when he sets himself to make a special impression, and, we should imagine, made additionally striking by piquant instrumentation. Francesca concludes by saying to the book, "Reste à jamais fermé," but at that moment the voice of Ascanio is heard without, singing to the effect that what has been stolen can be restored. Francesca listens, but remains firm to her virtuous resolution, and retires. Ascanio continues till a sudden cry escapes him. The dagger of an assassin has struck home, and Paolo, who enters the room and, looking from a balcony into the street, calls his name, receives no answer. Then the lover sings an air—"J'ai voulu te revoir, O Paradis perdu!"—in which there is abundance of forcible expression, if no great musical beauty. He, too, sees the book and, approaching it, reads again the incident of Guinevere's avowal. It recalls the kiss of Francesca—"avant-coureur du ciel, qui m'a donné l'enfer"—and excites his passion to the utmost. Some one approaches, and he hides. It is Francesca carrying a lamp. She cannot sleep, and now again sees the fatal book. But it is open! Who has opened it? Instinctively she invokes Paolo, without seeing him. "Ne parais pas! Fuis." But Paolo rushes from his hiding-place, and then begins a long love-scene. Francesca's resolution sustains her for some time, till, overcome with emotion, she sinks upon a couch. Paolo then recalls to her the scene of the book (Act I.) and enacts it once more. This appeal she cannot resist. The kiss of the first act is repeated, and then, at the moment of highest delight, the hand of Fate falls. Malatesta appears on the threshold, sword in hand. The curtain hides the rest. All the music of this scene is among the best ever written by M. Thomas. It is intense without exaggeration, and descriptive without being inartistic. Moreover, there are passages of genuine vocal melody, and not a monopoly of mere declamation. Dramatically, also, the scene is a success—one long excitement, in fact, culminating when the sinister figure of Malatesta stands in the doorway.

The story has been told, and again we look upon the "Inferno." The spirits of Francesca and Paolo once more rest upon the rock, singing of "love without hope." As they do so, Beatrice (Dante's Beatrice) appears, surrounded by angels and attended by the music of harps, surrounded by apostrophises her as the "star of pardon" and "blessed messenger." She brings redemption to the lost ones, and the work forthwith ends with a triumphant ensemble, broadly phrased, simply harmonised, and splendidly effective.

It is said that "Françoise de Rimini" has not held the attention of Paris. We regret the fact, but cannot explain it, although some parts of the work are uninteresting. The story as a whole is so pathetic, the crises in it so dramatic, and the music so appropriate and expressive that it would not surprise us to find M. Thomas's latest Opera ultimately accepted as his best.

King Thamos.—An Historical Drama. From the German of Freiherr von Gebler. The Choruses and Incidental Music composed by W. A. Mozart. The English Version by W. Grist.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

MOZART, in a letter to his father, dated February 15, 1783, says:—"I regret not being able to make use of the music for 'Thamos,' for not having pleased here, it is included among the tabooed pieces, no longer to be performed. For the sake of the music alone it might possibly be given again, but it is not likely. It is really a pity." It would indeed have been a pity had such fine music died with the drama for which it was composed; but happily three of the choruses in the work were subsequently adapted as motetts for church use; and in this form only they have become generally known under their Latin titles "Splendente te, Deus," "Deus, tibi laus et honor," and "Ne pulvis et cinis," although the second of these has been necessarily altered at the conclusion, in order to gain a more effective close when used as a separate piece. The English translation of the text by Mr. William Grist, is exceedingly good; and in the forthcoming performance of the work by the Borough of Hackney Choral Association, many persons will be surprised at the dramatic power evidenced in those portions of the music still almost unknown, and which, but for this resuscitation, might still have remained so. We may particularly mention an instrumental movement, in D minor and major, after the fourth act, and the final solo and chorus, both of which pieces bear the unmistakable stamp of Mozart's genius. Now that this music is available in that familiar octavo form which appeals so directly to the general public, we have little doubt that "King Thamos" will be frequently heard in our concert-rooms.

History of Music. By Emil Naumann. Translated by F. Praeger. [Cassell, Petter, Galpin and Co.]

TEN parts of this History are now before us; and it may truly be said that it grows upon us as it progresses. The early parts appeared somewhat diffuse, and led us to entertain grave doubts as to the completion of the work in anything like the small space of twenty-four such numbers. The translator, however, no doubt foresaw the necessity of announcing about what time it would be brought to a conclusion; and it seems now probable that, with a few extra parts, which certainly no purchaser will object to, the promise originally made will be fulfilled. The history of Greek music is particularly instructive, the scales and "systems" being as well explained as our limited actual knowledge of them will permit. It is truly said that music, according to the Pythagoreans, was governed by numerical laws instead of by the truer instincts of the ear; and that by this arbitrary method the third—that most agreeable of all intervals—was regarded as a dissonance, this in no small degree preventing any development of harmony and part-writing as we now understand these terms. Space will not allow us to do more than draw attention to the valuable information contained in this work; but we may mention that, amongst many others, the chapter upon those pioneers of the art, the bards and troubadours, will be found extremely interesting. The illustrations are very good throughout; and the translator deserves a word of commendation for the manner in which he has performed his task.

Power and Love. A Sacred Song. The words written by the Rev. J. Troutbeck. The music, in which is embodied the melody typical of the Redeemer, from the Oratorio, "The Redemption," composed by Charles Gounod. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE exquisitely sympathetic theme with which Gounod has typified the Redeemer in his new Oratorio is now too well known to need any criticism upon the music of the sacred song before us; but its adaptability to words being so striking, we are glad to find not only that a vocal piece has been based upon the melody, but that the pleasurable task has been undertaken by the composer himself. The syncopated accompaniment, which adds such additional beauty to the subject in the Oratorio, is retained throughout, with the exception of an expressive coda, which terminates the song with that deeply religious fervour which colours the entire composition. Mr. Troutbeck has proved himself a worthy ally, for his verses are earnest and hopeful as the motive to which they are wedded; the concluding portion, which we have already alluded to, seeming to be inspired by, rather than written to, the music. We perceive that the song has been already sung by Mr. Santley, whose rendering of it may be accepted as an excellent lesson to the many vocalists who will speedily follow his example.

Löhr's Primer. A Catechism of the Rudiments of Music, specially adapted for the Use of Choirs and Schools.

[Stanley Lucas, Weber and Co.]

MR. HARVEY LÖHR, in his Preface to this Catechism, says that it is "designed to meet a want long felt by choir-masters and others engaged in teaching the rudiments of music in classes." Considering the number of elementary musical books published in this teaching age, we can scarcely imagine that this "want" can possibly be felt, unless some other than the generally received system is to form the basis of instruction, for surely the names of the notes, the explanation of the use of the clefs, diatonic and chromatic scales, &c., are to be found in innumerable books expressly written for the use of choirs. We naturally look, therefore, in the Catechism before us for anything new, and we find the Breve called a "Double-bar note," which certainly, considering the conventional meaning of the word "Double-bar," we do not consider at all happy. Then, although the C clef is given on the first, third and fourth lines of the staff, the pitch of the clef-note is never mentioned, so that we cannot but think that there must inevitably be some confusion on this important subject in the mind of a young student. There can be no doubt that the position of the clefs shown on the great staff of eleven lines at once makes the matter clear; and if this system were universally pursued in teaching classes, pupils would grow up with a knowledge of the pitch of voices, instead of having to acquire this knowledge in after-life. We know excellent tenor singers who have not the slightest idea of the true pitch of the note they are singing, and those who teach classes cannot, therefore, be too particular upon this point. Apart from the minor objections we have mentioned, Mr. Löhr's Catechism may be recommended to the attention of those for whom it is designed.

Fifty Voice Exercises. By J. Concone. Tonic Sol-fa Edition. Edited by C. L. B. [J. Curwen and Sons.]

THESE beautiful Exercises are here printed with the addition of the Tonic Sol-fa to that of the ordinary notation, for the purpose of aiding those who practise without a master to train themselves as solo-singers on the "movable doh" system. The Editor also tells us, in his preface, that he places this edition before the world in the hope that professors of singing "may become more inclined than they are at present to acknowledge the great advantage the Tonic Sol-fa system has in teaching true intonation without instrumental aid." Seeing that the charming accompaniments to these Exercises are inseparable from the voice-parts, we can scarcely understand how the tempered pianoforte can accord with the "true intonation" which is the boast of the Tonic Sol-faist; but certainly, if pianist and singer agree to make mutual concessions, this collection of Concone's Studies will be found invaluable to a vocal student. The edition is printed with extreme care in both notations.

Three Rondos for the Pianoforte.*

Composed by Gustav Merkel.
[Patey and Willis.]

SONATINAS foreshadowing the works of the great composers are of all things the very best practice for juvenile pianists; for the sooner they are taught to think that form and design are essential in musical compositions the sooner will they learn to estimate mere showy pieces at their true value. Judging from the specimen before us, we have every hope that a name has been added to the list of composers for the young, for in every respect the Sonatina in E flat fulfils all the conditions we require in such works. The first movement is planned on a recognised model, and contains passages which employ both hands with good effect throughout. The Rondo is based upon a spirited theme, and is sufficiently developed for the dimensions of the work. Equal praise must be given to the three Rondos, all of which are melodious and well written for the instrument. The first, an Allegretto in E flat, has a particularly striking theme; the second, a Barcarole, in A minor and major, apart from its attractiveness, contains good exercise for double notes; and the third, an Allegretto in A major, although perhaps not quite so pleasing as its companions, may be confidently recommended as a piece well adapted for teaching.

The Birthday Book of Musicians and Composers, for every day in the Year. By E. Pauer.
[Forsyth Brothers.]

HERR PAUER tells us in the preface to this work that the popularity of the Birthday Book identified with the names of celebrated literary men has suggested to him the idea of compiling a similar one devoted to musicians and composers. The notion is indeed an excellent one, and much praise is due to an artist actively engaged in his profession for devoting so much time to his self-imposed task. When we say, however, that the names of Wesley, the composer, and Braham, the vocalist, are omitted, it will sufficiently show that all the eminent musicians are not included. We may also remark that it would assuredly have been better to simply record the date of birth after the names, without any opinion upon the relative merits of the persons mentioned, and to have used the same sized type for each. The terms "meritorious," "distinguished," "celebrated," &c., are not required in a mere Birthday Book, and appear the more strange as some well-known artists are left without any such observations. Apart from these objections—which, with a few wrong dates, may be easily remedied in a second edition—the book is well worthy of the patronage of all music-lovers; an alphabetical index at the conclusion affording easy reference to each name.

The Morning and Evening Service, set to Music in the Key of G. By Philip Armes, Mus. Doc., Oxon.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE ORGANIST of Durham Cathedral is sufficiently conservative to adhere to the old system of notation, the minim being the unit of time measurement almost throughout this Service. Curiously enough, however, at the opening of the Nunc Dimittis the signature, alike in the voice parts and the accompaniment, is 3-4, though the music is in 3-2 time. This, of course, is a mere inadvertence. In style this Service is solid and contrapuntal, but a modern tone is imparted by frequent changes of key. The most abrupt transition occurs in the Jubilate, the second verse of which is in E flat and the third in E natural. It may be noted that the organ and the voices frequently move independently of each other, and Dr. Armes manifests considerable skill in polyphonic writing. Perhaps the most effective of the four canticles is the Magnificat, especially the extremely vigorous and spirited setting of verses 6-8. Objection may be taken to some minor points in the Service. For example, the shortening of the word "tookest" to "took'st" should have been avoided, and the consecutive sevenths between treble and bass (Magnificat, page 9, bar 5) and the fourths between alto and bass (page 11, bar 7) have a somewhat harsh effect. On the whole, however, Dr. Armes may be congratulated on his most recent addition to the repertory of the Cathedral.

Select Overtures. Arranged for the Organ. By Arthur Henry Brown. [B. Williams.]

THESE transcriptions, five in number, are as follows:—Grand Overture in D, by Mehul—taken, we believe, from an opera entitled "Le Trésor supposé"—Mozart's "Titus," Gluck's "Orpheus," Arne's "Comus," and Boyce's "The Chaplet." We should suppose that not one of these pieces has hitherto been arranged for the organ, and if there be any merit in avoiding ground already well trodden, Mr. Brown is fully entitled to commendation for the same. But the main point is whether the works he has selected are appropriate to the instrument, and at the best only a qualified answer can be given in the affirmative. The Preludes of Mozart and Gluck are certainly not organ music in any sense of the term, but Méhul's Overture, a broadly written, dignified piece, the Handelian "Comus," and Boyce's composition, are fairly and legitimately effective. The last-named piece is in three movements—a Fugato in C, a Gavotte in A minor, and a Minuet in C. It may be noted that Boyce died in 1779, not 1799 as here stated.

The Child and the Flowers. Written by Mary Mark Lemon. Composed by Odoardo Barri. [B. Williams.]

WE have so often recorded our opinion of the "dying child" class of poetry, which, from its appealing directly to the feelings of the listeners, half accomplishes the work of the composer, that it is unnecessary in noticing this song to do more than announce to those who cling to such sentimental effusions that the verses—which are far above the average—have as much in them about the "Angels" and the "Golden Gate" as can possibly be desired. The music, however, is by no means conventional. A melodious theme, delicately accompanied, and thoroughly vocal, expresses the words most sympathetically; and indeed the song has so much merit that we shall be extremely glad to meet with another composition by the same author wedded to more healthful poetry.

The Wolseley March. For the Pianoforte. Composed, and Dedicated to General Lord Wolseley of Cairo, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew.
[Duncan Davison and Co.]

WHETHER Mrs. Bartholomew has been inspired by the occasion we cannot say, but certainly her March, dedicated to the hero of the day, is thoroughly worthy both of herself and the subject which called it forth. The bold Theme in A is excellently contrasted with what we suppose must be called the "Trio," in the subdominant. The Coda, too, is full of life, and most effectively concludes a composition which, attractive as it is for the pianoforte, seems to demand the resources of a military band.

The Office of the Holy Communion, set to Music in the Key of F. By Edward J. Bellerby, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

MR. BELLERBY's music is of an easy character, and is doubtless intended for parish choirs of rather limited resources. It is, upon the whole, tolerably successful, but it is one of those compositions which, after having been heard more than once, leave a very indefinite impression upon the hearers. Some will say this is as it should be in music for the Holy Communion. If so, then Mr. Bellerby has been very successful.

God be merciful. Motett. By Joseph Smith, Mus. Doc.
[Weekes and Co.]

THIS is a composition of some importance, it having gained the prize at the Welsh Eisteddfod of 1880. The composer shows that he has abilities of no mean order, but, judging from this specimen, they are chiefly technical, and original thoughts are few and far between. The choruses, of which there are two rather developed specimens, are carefully and well written, and are such as a good choir would delight in, but, from an inventive point of view, they cannot be classed very high. As regards the Trio for treble, alto and tenor, to the words "O let the nations be glad," the voice parts are undoubtedly pleasing and effective, but the accompaniment in places sounds laboured and, as it were, fitted on to the vocal part without adding to its beauty.

Spohr's 24th Psalm. Arranged for Organ Solo. By Alexandre Guilman. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

WHETHER this composition lends itself to organ arrangement is, we think, a matter for doubt. Even in its original form we have been inclined to think the Psalm heavy, and to a certain extent devoid of interest, and under its present guise it is more strikingly so. However, M. Guilman has done all he could do under the circumstances, and to those who admire the work no doubt the present arrangement will be acceptable.

Sing praises unto the Lord. Anthem. Composed by G. H. Swift. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE above is a very commendable little Anthem. It does not exhibit very much individuality, and probably the composer did not desire that it should do so; but it is written with a true appreciation of the varied ideas suggested by the text, and the effects are gained by simple means. The parts lie well within the reach of ordinary voices, and the organ part, though effective, is not of a nature to give anxiety to a performer of ordinary capabilities.

New and Original Compositions for the Organ or American Organ. Book I. By Dr. William Spark. [Metzler and Co.]

DR. SPARK opens this new work with an easy and pleasing composition in a quasi pastoral style, entitled "Sunday Morning." The next number is a "Funeral March," composed in memory of the late Earl of Beaconsfield. The chief subject (in C minor) is distinctly successful: very easy, very melancholy, and very good; but we cannot approve of the Trio in C major, which is, to our mind, exceedingly weak. We may mention that evidently the work is intended for those who have only acquired a very moderate knowledge of playing.

Minuet and Trio. Arranged for the Organ by the Composer, W. S. Hoyte. [Weekes and Co.]

THE title-page of this piece states that it was written for the orchestra of the Highbury Philharmonic Society, but it is certainly well adapted to the "king of instruments." The Minuet, in F, is stately and dignified, and the moving bass in quavers forms an effective pedal part. The Trio in E flat is graceful and melodious, forming an excellent contrast to the preceding section. Mr. Hoyte's composition may be warmly commended to the notice of organists.

FOREIGN NOTES.

THE Deutsches Morgenblatt contains the following interesting details concerning an opera by Mozart: "It may not be generally known that the melodies to the two songs of Papageno, as well as to the duet 'Bei männern welche Liebe fühlen,' in Mozart's 'Zauberflöte,' really originated with Schikaneder, the author of the libretto. Idealised by Mozart's genius, as they are, the latter had no choice but to adopt them, since Schikaneder—who sang the part of Papageno on the occasion of the first performance of the opera in 1791, at Vienna—was only able to commit to memory such melodies as he had himself invented. In other portions of the work, notably in the duet following upon the first meeting of Papageno and Papagena, the influence of the librettist made itself likewise felt. . . . At the gathering of the Priests, in the second act, there was originally no music; the ceremony opened in solemn silence. Schikaneder, however, clamoured for a pathetic march, and Mozart, there and then, wrote in the orchestral parts of the assembled musicians the well-known beautiful march. It is needless to add that Schikaneder was very boastful of his share in the opera, which indeed he looked upon as essentially his own work. When receiving the numerous congratulations of his friends, after the first representation of 'Die Zauberflöte,' he is reported to have exclaimed: 'True, the opera has pleased, but it would have done so still more if Mozart had not hashed up my ideas so much!'"

Schumann's Opera "Genoveva" was produced with much success on the 9th ult. at the German Opera House at Rotterdam.

The present number of pupils at the Leipzig Conservatorium is 403—viz., 199 male and 204 female, of whom 128 are non-German, including sixty-five natives of Great Britain and Ireland.

Herr Bernhard Scholz, of Breslau, has been definitely appointed Director of the Hoch'sche Conservatorium, at Frankfurt, in the room of the late Joachim Raff, and will assume his new functions in April next.

Herr Bilse, the eminent Berlin conductor, gave a performance with his orchestra on the 12th ult., at the Berlin Concerthaus, which was rendered special by the fact of its being the 300th Concert conducted by him in that locality.

A very successful performance of the "Antigone" of Sophocles, with Mendelssohn's music, has recently taken place at the Darmstadt Hoftheater, where the scenic arrangements were carried out upon the model of the antique stage.

Three posthumous works by Henri Vieuxtemps have just been published by the firm of Brandus and Cie., in Paris, viz., a Violin-concerto (No. 7), in A minor, "Impressions et Rémiscences de Pologne" for violin and pianoforte, and "Ma marche funèbre" for the same instruments.

Arrigo Boito's "Mefistofele" is to be performed this month at the Théâtre de la Monnaie of Brussels, under the direction of the composer, who is also supervising the final rehearsals. The recent first production, at the same theatre, of M. Leo Délibes' Opera, "Jean de Nivelle," has been highly successful, and frequent repetitions of the work have since taken place.

Herr Wilhelmj, the eminent violinist, who some months ago returned to Germany after a prolonged stay in Transatlantic countries, will appear at one of the Philharmonic Concerts at Vienna during the present month.

The recent first production at Antwerp of M. Gounod's Opera "Le Tribut de Zamora" resulted in a veritable triumph for the composer, who personally conducted the performance.

A biography of Grétry (the first, we believe, which has ever been published), from the pen of the Belgian savant Edouard Gregoir, has just been issued at Brussels. A biographical work of the same master is likewise said to have been left in manuscript by the late M. Rongé, of Liège. The two works are likely to throw much interesting light upon the career of the "founder of comic opera."

A monument will shortly be erected at Smolensk in honour of Michael Glinka, the national Russian composer.

A monument is being erected over the grave of Berlioz, at the instance of some of the numerous admirers of the once so much neglected master, and will shortly be unveiled. It consists of a bust of the composer, on the pedestal of which are inscribed the words: "Monument élevé à la gloire du compositeur Berlioz (Louis Hector) né à Côte Saint-André (Ivère) le 11 Décembre, 1803, décédé membre de l'Académie des Beaux-Arts le 8 Mars, 1868"—followed by the titles of his most prominent works.

We have received several numbers of a new art-journal, published at Barcelona under the title of Notas Musicales y Literarias, the contents of which argue well for the true artistic tendencies and the general solidity of the undertaking. We wish our young contemporary a full measure of success.

A Times correspondent writes from Geneva: "In the person of Johann Carl Eschmann, who died on October 27, Switzerland has lost a highly-gifted musician, and her most 'prolific' master. Eschmann came of a musical family. Early in the century his grandfather, Jacob, was a shoemaker at Schöneberg, with seven sons, all of whom played some instrument or other. One became the conductor of an orchestra at Wädenswyl, another a pianist at Lausanne, two entered the French army as bandmen, two others became wandering musicians, and travelled with flute and fiddle over the greater part of central and southern Europe. One, Heinrich, after various vicissitudes, settled as a teacher of music at Winterthur, where was born to him on April 12, 1826, Johann Karl, the subject of this notice. The old man died only in October last, a few days before his son. Karl was trained to music in his earliest years, and in 1845, when his scholastic education was considered complete, he became a pupil in the Leipzig Conservatorium, considered then the first music school in Europe. It was Eschmann's good fortune, while at Leipzig, to make the acquaintance of Mendelssohn and become one of his private pupils. His first composition was published in 1848, and well received both by critics and the public. On his return from Germany, Karl settled at Zürich, where, besides composing, he taught music and the theory and practice of composition. He afterwards removed to Winterthur, then to Schaffhausen; but in 1866 he returned to Zürich, where he died. He was highly successful as a teacher, and his published works exceed eighty. The one by which he is best known, both at home and abroad, though not the most important, is his 'Musikalisches Jugendbrevier,' which for thirty years has enjoyed a well deserved popularity."

CORRESPONDENCE.

KAHLENBERG'S TRANSCRIPTIONS OF MENDELSSOHN'S AIRS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—Having seen your remarks concerning the two Transcriptions of Mendelssohn's Prayer, from the opera "Melusine," and "Song of Love," in your valuable paper of November 1, I beg to give you, at your desire, the following explanation. I received both melodies in the year 1850 from my then master, the Seminarlehrer and organist Klauer. The latter was the pupil and intimate friend of Mendelssohn, a very good composer, pianist, and organist. He received these manuscripts from Mendelssohn himself, and gave them to his pupils. Klauer lived at Eisleben, where he died in 1858.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

KAHLENBERG.

211, Oxford Street, London, W.

[We have already said that the subject of the "Prayer" is that of the "March of Priests" in "Zauberflöte," and that Mendelssohn's Opera, "Melusine," is unknown to the world at large. All this we should have thought would have been known to Herr Kahlenberg; but we print his letter as we received it, and leave our readers to form their own judgment on the facts.—Ed. Musical Times.]

STREET NOISES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I thank you heartily for your article on street noises, and hope it may do something to relieve us of these nuisances. As examples, I may say that the quiet grass-grown street in which I live has been lately invaded by the wretched "Salvation Army," with their drum, &c.; twice lately have my singing lessons been stopped till a pair of horrible street-singers had passed; and a brass band frequently interrupts choir-practice in a similar way. As for railway-whistles, see how the fine Town Hall at Shoreditch is spoilt for concert purposes by the long and piercing whistles which are heard from almost every passing train. At Cannon Street also the same nuisance prevails.

I am, sir, yours truly,

2, Grove Place, Hackney.

The programme included a Quartet by Mendelssohn, well played by Miss Deane, Messrs. F. Z. and J. Z. Hermann, and C. Deane; a Quintet by Mozart, in which the Messrs. Hermann and Deane were assisted by Messrs. Deane and Long. Mr. A. Massey accompanied, and Mr. McLean conducted.

TREDEGAR.—An Evening Concert was given in the Temperance Hall on Thursday, the 14th ult., which was highly successful. The artists engaged were Miss M. J. Williams, R. A. M., Miss Jenny Lewis, Miss Margery Lewis, Eos Morlais, Mr. William Jones, and Mr. C. C. Caird, accompanist. The most successful vocalists were Miss M. J. Williams and Eos Morlais, both of whom were well received. Miss Williams in her song of "The Little Match Girl" (Molloy) being greeted with the warmest applause.

UXBRIDGE.—On the 15th ult. the Choral Society gave its first Concert this season, when Cinderella, by Hofmann, was excellently rendered. The vocalists engaged were Miss Fusselle, Miss Marchant and Mr. Forington, all of whom were highly successful. The choir also sang the difficult music with much effect, the sopranos and basses especially being very firm in attacking the leads. As no orchestra was obtainable, the accompaniments were played by Miss Stephenson (piano) and Mr. J. Walsh (harmonium), and the Conductor (Mr. T. Pettit, A.R.A.M.) must have felt much gratified with the success of his Society. In the second part Miss Stephenson played a composition by Mendelssohn with much success, and encores were contributed by Miss Fusselle, Miss Marchant and Mr. Forington.

WALTON-ON-THE-HILL.—A Ballad Concert was given, under the direction of Mr. J. E. Fimister, Organist and Choirmaster of the Parish Church, at the National Schoolrooms, on Monday, the 4th ult., to a large and attentive audience. Mrs. Wood met with a good reception, her singing being highly appreciated, and Mr. Willoughby Greenhill also won warm applause for his songs. A feature of the evening was the rendering of Thalberg's "Home, sweet home," by Mr. W. A. Ellis, M.C.O. Organist of St. Ann's, Lambeth. Miss Gray, Miss Faulkner, Miss Graham, Mr. Wright and Mr. Cooke also assisted. Miss Todhunter and Mr. Fimister accompanied. The performance was very successful.

WIMBLEDON.—The Musical Society gave an excellent performance of Handel's Messiah on the 14th ult., in the Drill Hall, before a large audience. The soloists were Miss Maynard, Miss Lennon, Mr. Dalsell, and Mr. Winn, all of whom acquitted themselves admirably. Mr. Bosworth played the trumpet obbligato in "The trumpet shall sound," exceedingly well. The orchestra was led by Mr. Carrodus. The choruses were sung by the choir of 150 voices with much precision and effect. Mr. Summer conducted with skill and judgment.

WORCESTER.—The second of the series of three Concerts announced by Mr. Spark took place at the Public Hall on November 30. The principal vocalists were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Benson (who replaced Mr. Vernon Rigby, absent from indisposition), and Mr. Burgon; solo pianoforte, Mr. F. Cliffe; solo violoncello, M. Albert. The programme was carefully selected and well rendered.—Barnett's Ancient Mariner was given on the 12th ult. by the Worcestershire Musical Union, under the conductorship of the Rev. E. V. Hall. The performance was a good one throughout, the band being excellent and the soloists—Mrs. Evans, Miss Wakefield, Mr. Dyson, and Mr. S. G. Lyttelton—thoroughly efficient. In the second part a portion of Mozart's Symphony in C was well played by the band, as was also a new composition by the Rev. E. V. Hall, "Gavotte des Fées," which was enthusiastically redemanded. At the next Concert Gade's Psyche is to be performed.

TIMES.

"The music of Herr Gade is in perfect keeping with its subject. It is graceful and melodious rather than powerful, and the lyrical portions gain prominence over the tragic motives of the story, which other masters might have emphasised. The music assigned to the heroine, more especially, is marked by a freshness and fluency of conception, which show that the youthful innocence of 'Psyche' most immediately appeals to the composer. . . . Herr Gade's music will be appreciated wherever refinement and grace combined with sound scholarship are valued."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"Its music from first to last was intelligible, and charged with the grace and beauty of the school that, having had Herr Gade as a pupil, now claims him as a professor. . . . From beginning to end we are conscious of that happy union of the classic and the romantic which Mendelssohn and Schumann, each in his degree and manner, so conspicuously illustrate. . . . I cordially endorse the enthusiastic verdict of the Birmingham audience, for, though Herr Gade's Cantata does not achieve the oft-times questionable feat of marking 'a new departure,' it is a thing of beauty that should live long to be a joy."

DAILY NEWS.

"The vocal and orchestral combinations in this (the closing) scene, as indeed throughout the Cantata, are masterly in the command of dramatic effects and contrasts."

STANDARD.

"Herr Gade's 'Psyche,' last night, was a legitimate success, and in this work the musical world has been enriched with something likely to endure."

MORNING POST.

"All that a sympathetic mind could suggest to clothe the story with becoming musical raiment has been done with skill and taste. . . . The Cantata, as a whole work, will be as gladly welcomed by Choral Societies as 'The Crusaders' of the same composer. . . . There is some very pleasing writing both for voices and orchestra."

ATHENÆUM.

"We think 'Psyche' likely to be one of the most popular of the composer's works. It presents no excessive difficulties to the executants, though it undoubtedly requires finished orchestral playing; but even without orchestra it will be found effective, and is well suited for choral societies of fair acquisitions."

SUNDAY TIMES.

"The second part begins with an exquisite little scherso, leading to another trio. The birds in playful throng, with chorus for the same voices (soprano, alto, and tenor), than which it would be impossible to imagine anything more tuneful and charming, the instrumentation here being simply masterly. . . . The composer conducted, was warmly greeted, and was made the hero of an enthusiastic ovation at the close. In short, a perfect triumph was gained."

GUARDIAN.

"The music is always graceful and pretty, and admirably constructed. . . . It need hardly be said that Mr. Gade was heartily applauded at the close of the performance; and without doubt 'Psyche' must be recorded as one of the great successes of the year 1882."

MIDLAND COUNTIES HERALD.

"The choral writing is very good, especially at the close of the second and fourth parts, whilst the instrumentation is as bright and elegant as we had a right to expect from this gifted composer."

BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT

GRANTED TO

WM. CHINNOCK DYER

Letters Patent from the French Government have also been received by the Inventor.

Members of the Musical Profession and Trade are requested to apply to the Inventor and Patentee for the Drawings, full Explanations, and Prices of this the latest and most improved

PATENT ACTION

FOR

Attaching Organ Pedals to a Pianoforte

WHICH ACTION HE HAS, AFTER CONTINUED STUDY, BROUGHT TO PERFECTION, AND GAINED THE APPROVAL OF HER MAJESTY'S COMMISSIONERS OF PATENTS.

This Action is manufactured solely of mahogany, and in its working is perfectly noiseless, and as weights and springs are not used it is warranted never to get out of order, and will last as long as the Pianoforte. It must be mentioned that the keys of the Piano are not forced up at the back by this Action, but are pulled down in the most natural manner at the place where they are played upon by the fingers. The Inventor, being an Organist, can most confidently recommend his invention to those wishing for real good pedal practice at home.

All is sent complete, with full printed "Directions for Attaching," and the Action, being placed under the keyboard of the instrument, is easily attached to any Pianoforte.

Set of Radiating and Concave Pedals (30 Notes, C to F), with Patent Action, price	6 15
Set of Straight and Concave Pedals (30 Notes, C to F), as recommended at the Organ Conference, with Patent Action, price	7 15
Those who already have a set of Pedals can be supplied with the PATENT ACTION only, price	4 4s.

TESTIMONIALS.

13, Watterton Road, St. Peter's Park, London, W.
I have much pleasure in stating my opinion that Mr. WM. CHINNOCK DYER'S Patent Action for attaching Organ Pedals to a Pianoforte is likely to prove very valuable to Organists and Students of the organ. It possesses several advantages over other actions which have come under my observation, and I shall have no hesitation in recommending the invention to my friends and pupils.

F. E. GLADSTONE, MUS. DOCT., CANTAB.
Dunsham House, Weston-super-Mare.

I have minutely examined Mr. Wm. Chinnock Dyer's Pedals and Action attached to a Piano, and find it in every way satisfactory. The points that strongly recommend his patent are—

1. Simplicity of action, and therefore no liability of getting out of order.
2. Quick and ready response to the lightest Pedal touch, so that all degrees of tone are readily obtainable.
3. It is perfectly noiseless in working, which character, seeing that no springs are used and that all the centres are carefully bushed, it is likely to retain after constant use.
4. Compared with the roller-board action—which hitherto I have considered the only satisfactory method of attachment—this new action is inexpensive, and it is not in any way less effective.

I believe it only wants to be well known to become the general mode of attaching Organ Pedals to Pianofortes.

ARTHUR E. CROOK, MUS. BAC., CANTAB.,
Organist of the Parish Church, Weston-super-Mare.
Catterick, Yorkshire.

I have much pleasure in adding my testimony to the great excellence of the Patent Action for attaching Organ Pedals to Pianofortes, invented by Mr. Wm. Chinnock Dyer, of Weston-super-Mare, and am sure his invention will meet with general satisfaction from Organists and Students.

Being a purchaser I can, from experience, recommend it to Organists and others requiring pedal practice at home to be invaluable.

The Action is perfectly noiseless, works well, and can easily be attached to any Piano or Pedals.

ROBERT MACK, Organist, Parish Church.

CAUTION.—This being the latest Patent Pedal Action, intending purchasers should note that it is the most perfect and reliable, as it contains every improvement, and being manufactured solely of well-seasoned mahogany, carefully bushed with red cloth, will continue to give the very best Pedal practice to Organists and Students.

Kindly read the testimonials above.

Before purchasing send to the Inventor for the drawings and prices of this the most recent Patent Pedal Action.

Organists should recommend these Pedals and Patent Action to their Pupils.

JASON

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

For Solo Voices, Chorus, and Orchestra.

THE POEM WRITTEN BY

WILLIAM GRIST

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

A. C. MACKENZIE.

Octavo, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.

TIMES.

"Mr. Mackenzie is in every sense a modern composer. There is in his music no trace of the slavish imitation of Mendelssohn which, for years after the death of that great composer, impeded the progress of any national or independent growth of musical art among us. . . . How the composer has accomplished his task of illustrating the action I cannot for the present explain at such length as the music deserves. I may, however, say in summary fashion that Mr. Mackenzie's 'Jason' contains more clever writing and more genuine inspiration than are to be found in any English Cantata produced during recent years, with the sole exception, perhaps, of Mr. Cowen's 'St. Ursula.'"

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"An orchestral intermezzo, 'On the waters,' represents the voyage from Hellas to Colchis. This is a charming number, orthodox as to form, and poetic in spirit as though the composer of 'Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage' had written it. Indeed, Mendelssohn could not have been far from Mr. Mackenzie when he conceived this fresh and breezy music."

STANDARD.

"The Cantata of 'Jason' is not only his most pretentious, but also his most successful work. Its bright, melodious numbers will, in all probability, soon become popular. 'Jason' is described as a dramatic Cantata for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra. It is exceedingly clever in construction, and the orchestration is peculiarly picturesque in places."

DAILY CHRONICLE.

"'Jason' is a composition characterised by vivid imagination, grace, and power, and it marks a further advance upon the road on which Mr. Mackenzie has already made such satisfactory progress. The Cantata left a great impression upon the audience, and the composer was heartily greeted at the conclusion from all parts of the hall."

ATHENÆUM.

"We regret that our space will not allow us to analyse 'Jason' in detail. Mr. Mackenzie's style, though not free from signs of the influence of Schumann and Wagner, shows considerable individuality; of direct reminiscences there are very few. Among the best portions of his new work are the vigorous and spirited opening chorus, broken by a charming tenor solo; the chorus 'See, the All-father approves from above'; the following intermezzo for orchestra, entitled 'On the Waters,' a lovely instrumental picture of which any living composer might be proud; Medea's scene; the duet between herself and Jason; the chorus of armed men; and the whole finale."

WEEKLY DISPATCH.

"It may be premature to express so decided an opinion but I am inclined to think 'Jason' is the finest Cantata ever penned by an English composer. It is not only scholarly in a high sense, but is written with a freedom of resource and a command over the various forms of expression not often equalled. The choruses are splendid, the melodies generally striking and unconventional, and the orchestration is exceedingly rich and varied."

EDWIN ASHDOWN,
HANOVER SQUARE, LONDON.

IT is a most remarkable thing that, notwithstanding the great activity in musical matters which is displayed in almost every field, both in this country and on the continent, one branch of composition for the pianoforte, and that the most perfect in form and character, has been almost entirely neglected. I refer to works in the Sonata form for the pianoforte. However grand the heirlooms which the great masters have left us, our love of art must have grown very weak if we can be satisfied with the thought that it is to have no further development. The greatest composers themselves would have been the last to think it possible that their works, like the flower of the aloe, would be the culminating point, destroying instead of giving new life to the art for which they lived.

Whatever the achievements of one generation are, they only serve to widen the field in which the next works. Most people will be surprised to find, when they count the recent compositions in this form which they know even by name, how small the number is. The cause of this is, no doubt, the fact that it does not pay publishers to produce them. They are costly to bring out, and they have to compete with non-copyright works, which can, of course, be published without the expense of purchasing a manuscript. The result of this is, that our composers have been compelled, often reluctantly, to turn their attention to something in which their talents would be more recognised.

As it is practically impossible to bring out such works in the ordinary way of business, I have arranged to produce a series of TEN PIANOFORTE SONATAS by subscription.

I am glad to be able to say that the following composers have undertaken to write each one Sonata, making the ten offered:—

DR. FERDINAND HILLER.
NIELS W. GADE.
E. GRIEG.
CARL REINECKE.
ANTON DVORAK.

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.
PROF. G. A. MACFARREN.
CHAS. ED. STEPHENS.
JOHN FRANCIS BARNETT.
C. VILLIERS STANFORD.

There is no doubt that these compositions will form a most valuable addition to the répertoire of pianoforte players. The subscription price for the Ten Sonatas will be One Guinea (one-third of the marked price). This is a very small sum when compared with the prices which even the German publishers have had to charge when they have produced any similar works.

It will be a great convenience if those who wish to support what I think every musician must consider an interesting artistic undertaking will kindly communicate with me as soon as possible.

THE SHUNAMMITE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR SOLI VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

GEORGE GARRETT

Octavo, paper cover, 3s.

Chorus Parts, 2s. 8d.; String Parts, 1s.; Full Score, and Wind Parts, Manuscript.

STANDARD.

"Happier in his choruses than his solo numbers, Dr. Garrett exhibits a lively appreciation of the school which confesses allegiance to Mendelssohn, and has nothing whatever to do with the hideous cacophony which modern Germans would persuade us to receive as absolute music. Nothing particularly new is taught us in 'The Shunammite,' but every effect gained is reached by legitimate means; the choruses are bright and telling, and if the solos are of diminished interest, it only instances the difficulty of writing arias in the devotional style—a difficulty experienced by even greater musicians than Dr. Garrett. . . I fancy that 'The Shunammite' ought to become popular with choral societies, because it is distinctly interesting, and calls for nothing beyond ordinary means of exposition. There is one chorus in particular, 'Call for the mourning women,' that is enough to prove that the author is a man of more than ordinary mind and facility."

MORNING POST.

"The choruses, written with the skill and feeling of a well-trained musician, were admirably delivered. The recitatives are thoughtfully laid out, and the song for the Shunammite, 'My soul shall be joyful,' sung by Miss Williams, is most effective. 'I cried unto the Lord' is also good, though perhaps it is a little too long in the position it occupies. The writing in the scene descriptive of the mourning for the Shunammite's child is among the best and most original efforts of the kind given to the public for a long time, and may be taken as a proof that Dr. Garrett possesses powers which ought to be exercised again in like efforts. . . The merits of the Cantata are many, and will appeal most successfully to those who are content with the most expressive of a series of musical ideas represented with all respect for the laws of form and order. There is no unhealthy striving after the impossible and the undesirable; all is legitimate and musicianly. It will find a welcome reception in many quarters, and tend to augment the estimation in which the composer is held."

DAILY CHRONICLE.

"Dr. Garrett may rest satisfied that it does not detract from the high reputation he has acquired as a composer of church music and of slighter choral pieces. The conditions of rendering a new composition in a cathedral prevent outspoken expressions of public favour or of disapprobation; but during the hour and a half it occupied this morning, it completely held the attention of the assemblage. Dr. Garrett conducted, and he must have felt that his work was presented under favourable auspices."

GUARDIAN.

"The scene of the sickness and death of the child and the mourning over it is altogether admirable; it is thoroughly original, full of genuine emotion, and deeply impressive. If Dr. Garrett had not shown by this fine piece of writing what he can do, it is probable he would have escaped much of the severe criticism which so many have passed upon the Mendelssohnian character of the other portions of the work. In short, if he will write his next cantata entirely in the 'Garrett' style, he will achieve a success without reservation. But the cantata contains admirable vocal writing, and is well scored; and it is also so enriched with pleasing melody, and smooth, skilfully handled modulations, that it is a valuable addition to works of its class. Dr. Garrett conducted with firmness and judgment, and received manifold congratulations on the success of the cantata."

ATHENÆUM.

"Dr. Garrett's Cantata is the work of an excellent church musician who has written some irreproachable services and anthems. . . Naturally, Dr. Garrett's musicianship is disposed to most advantage in the choruses, of which the best are 'Children are an heritage,' and the concluding number of the first part, 'The voice of joy,' the former being noteworthy for some clever contrapuntal writing."

ACADEMY.

"The composer writes thoroughly well and has studied good models. The choruses 'Be not forgetful,' 'Sing we praise to our Creator,' and 'Death is come up,' seem to us most deserving of mention."

ERA.

"We may at once state that Dr. Garrett does not, like so many of our recent composers, sacrifice everything for the sake of a questionable originality. It is seen from the first that the composer aims not so much at dramatic as narrative effects. . . The chorus 'Sing we praise to our Creator,' is one of the happiest efforts of the composer. It is well and effectively written, with fluent melody and rich though comparatively simple harmony. . . Dr. Garrett may be satisfied with having done, if not a great, at least a good thing. There are evidences throughout his cantata, that, with a theme more suited to his special gifts he would have reached a still higher standard."

AN ODE FOR MUSIC

BY

WILLIAM COLLINS

SET TO MUSIC FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA BY

ALICE MARY SMITH

(MRS. MEADOWS WHITE).

Octavo, paper cover, 2s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"Firmness, vigour, and strength mark the treatment of conceptions which are massive rather than graceful and elegant. . . . I welcome Mrs. Meadows White's 'Ode to the Passions' as the production of undeniable talent, and a worthy addition to the musical things which, being English, give Englishmen cause for pride."

DAILY NEWS.

"The Cantata displays much musical taste and intelligence, with a considerable aptitude for the use of orchestral combinations, and the work will certainly not diminish the artistic reputation gained by Mrs. Meadows White's previous compositions."

STANDARD.

"Mrs. White's work is honest, straightforward, and legitimate in every acceptance of the term; she aims at producing no sensational effects, but achieves that which is infinitely better—a work which will grow upon the auditor and student alike as a pleasing and highly finished art-product."

ATHENÆUM.

"A work of great merit, and quite worthy of its position in a festival programme. It should prove an exceedingly useful addition to the repertoire of Choral Societies."

SUNDAY TIMES.

"Possesses merit of no ordinary calibre. It is a well-conceived and powerful setting of Collins's poem."

Twenty pages of beautifully engraved New Organ Compositions are supplied to subscribers every quarter for 2s. 6d.

Volumes I., II., III., IV., V., VI., and VII., each consisting of ONE HUNDRED and SIXTY PAGES of ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS for the ORGAN by the best living Organists and Composers (Foreign and English). Annual Subscription, 10s.; Non-Subscribers, 5s. net each Part.

FROM "THE MUSICAL STANDARD."

"Dr. Spark, who has so long and ably conducted the Organist's Quarterly, to be to the end of the Fourteenth Year of its existence. The Editor in his feelings of satisfaction at the result of so long-continued (14 years) and largely successful an undertaking. No little care and forethought must have been exercised in the conductorship of the journal. It must be recorded, too, that many compositions of remarkable worth have appeared in its pages from time to time, including a good many of Henry Smart's finest pieces. It must be further acknowledged that the Organist's Quarterly has supplied a valuable source of encouragement to a goodly number of young English writers for the instrument. So the work claims the good wishes of those interested in a largely increasing type of instrumental music."

FROM "THE LITERARY CHURCHMAN."

"We are reminded by the receipt of Parts 55 and 56 of the Organist's Quarterly Journal that Dr. Spark has actually succeeded in bringing this work to the end of the Fourteenth Year of its existence. We sincerely trust he may continue to carry it on with the same energy and success that have characterised his editorship throughout. Of course the pieces differ in merit, but among no less than 336 original compositions specially written for this work there are many of a very high order of merit, while all the pieces have been judiciously varied both as regards their difficulty and their suitability for instruments of different sizes. An example of this may be found by reference to these last two numbers."

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR

NEW PART-SONG. PRICE 3D.

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

This Part-Song, written for, and dedicated to, the Kyrle Society, is laid out in Mr. Gaul's very best manner, and while recalling, for its beautiful effects, his elegant Part-Song, "The silent land," the resemblance begins and ends there. Mr. Gaul knows to the very letter the capabilities of the voices he writes for, and one is perfectly safe, even after a single experience only, in predicting a widespread popularity to "The children's hour."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

TIMES.

"There is every reason to think that the almost unprecedented power of attracting the public which this remarkable work has proved to possess in the provinces and in London is not likely to be exhausted for a long time to come."

TELEGRAPH.

"The business of this [the Brighton] Festival came to an end on Saturday afternoon with a performance of M. Gounod's 'Redemption.' There was an overflowing audience, gathered from all the country round, and influenced by the utmost curiosity as to the latest-born of oratorios."

ATHENEUM.

"Gounod's 'Redemption' [at Bristol] naturally attracted a crowded audience, every seat in the large hall being filled. The work unquestionably improves on acquaintance."

GLASGOW HERALD.

"The first performance in London of M. Gounod's sacred masterwork was given to-night at the Royal Albert Hall in the presence of such an audience as is rarely seen even in that magnificent building. . . . Although the numbers could not be accurately told to-night, it is estimated that upwards of 11,000 persons were present."

WOLVERHAMPTON EVENING EXPRESS.

"On Monday evening the first of the Wolverhampton Festival Choral Society's concerts for the current season was given at the Agricultural Hall, Gounod's 'Redemption' being rendered with a band and chorus numbering nearly 300 performers. . . . It is creditable to the musical taste and appreciation of our town that never was a concert here better attended than that at which the life-work of the greatest living composer was performed."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

"The second concert of the current series, which took place in the Town Hall last night, brought together one of the largest audiences ever assembled there, not merely at the concerts of this society, but at any musical entertainment. The occasion was the first performance here since the Festival of the great work which is destined to make that Festival memorable, and the production of which certainly marks an epoch in the history of musical art."

NEW YORK HERALD.

"The work has been so thoroughly described in these columns that it is only necessary now to say that the promises held forth as to its popular and artistic merits were fully realised last evening, and that Gounod's 'Redemption' was accepted as a complete and absolute success."

THE MUSICAL REVIEW,

TO BE PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY,

The First Number will appear on Saturday, January 6, 1883.

THE MUSICAL REVIEW is started for the purpose of supplying the want long felt not only in England, but in the musical world generally, of a comprehensive weekly record of the progress of Musical Art in all its branches. The recent development and the extensive spread of English musical taste, and the amount and variety of music performed every year amongst us to supply that taste, have made London one of the musical centres of the world, where the currents of the Art, as represented by the leading talent of all countries, converge; and it is here, therefore, that a central organ of music may most fitly be published. THE MUSICAL REVIEW accordingly will be free from the narrowness of national or party prejudice. While giving due prominence to English Music, it will consider that music as a part of the great artistic movement which is not confined to one country, and of which the separate developments in France, or Germany, or Italy, or Russia, are only so many subdivisions, to be judged by the same standard of absolute merit.

THE MUSICAL REVIEW will not be made the organ of a party, much less of commercial interest of any kind. For this the Editor holds himself personally responsible.

In furthering the interests of Art and Artists for the sake of Art alone, in combining due reverence for the classical models with ready appreciation of all that is hopeful and truthful in modern music, THE MUSICAL REVIEW will endeavour to follow the example of Schumann's Neue Zeitschrift für Musik. Like that model of periodical literature, it will also endeavour to attract the interest of cultured musical amateurs, no less than that of professors, by avoiding abstruseness of treatment as far as a thorough discussion of the subject will allow.

The contents of THE MUSICAL REVIEW will consist of Leading Articles and shorter notes on topics of the day, full accounts of Musical Performances in London, and summaries of the more important events in the Provinces. Foreign Intelligence will be a special feature of the journal, and correspondents of ability in the musical capitals of Europe and America have been secured. All important musical publications and books on music will be treated by competent writers, and independent essays and articles on musical subjects will be contributed by leading musicians and critics both in this country and abroad. The tone of the new journal may best be indicated by the proverbial saying, "Fortiter in re, suaviter in modo." The unflinching truth will be spoken, but in no instance will personal susceptibilities be hurt without need. Only in the repression of incompetence and arrogant mediocrity will it be thought necessary to have recourse to the severer modes of criticism.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, INCLUDING POSTAGE, 19s. 6d.

CHALLEN & SON'S IRON-FRAME PIANOS

Have received the following Awards at the International Exhibitions of LONDON, 1862.—PRIZE MEDAL for "excellence of action and tone."
SOUTH AFRICA, 1877.—GOLD MEDAL for the best Pianette (the highest Award ever given for this class of Piano).
PARIS, 1878.—The MEDAILLE D'HONNEUR for "good and cheap Pianos" (great excellence combined with moderate cost).
MELBOURNE, 1881.—GOLD MEDAL for excellence of quality combined with solidity of construction.

IRON-FRAME PIANOS.

A system of construction which, by a careful application of scientific principles, Messrs. CHALLEN & SON have brought to great perfection, is now generally acknowledged as the only one calculated to render the Piano almost impervious to the deleterious influences of damp and extremes of temperature, while it stands better in tune with one-fourth of the usual tuning—a most important consideration where tuners are not readily obtained. The inestimable advantages thus secured are augmented by an increased power and purity of tone hitherto unattainable in the Upright Piano.

A selection from numerous testimonials will be a sufficient guarantee of the excellence of the Pianos manufactured by this Firm:—

The Pianettes manufactured by Messrs. CHALLEN & SON are most satisfactory instruments.

Hawthorn Lodge, January, 1882.

Having used one of your Pianos a great deal for studying music as well as singing, I can with pleasure testify to the fact that they possess a very fine tone and sustain the voice admirably. I have used Pianos by all the leading manufacturers, but I consider your instruments fully equal in every respect to any made, and I shall take every opportunity of recommending them.—Yours truly,

MARIE ROZE,

Prima Donna of Her Majesty's Opera.

I consider that Messrs. CHALLEN & SON have succeeded in providing, at a most moderate cost, Pianos of high-class workmanship and pure tone. Their Pianettes are specially deserving of notice in being remarkable both for their cheapness and general excellence. The instruments exhibited by Messrs. CHALLEN & SON in Paris were highly creditable, not only to them but to the English Section.

JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus. Doc., Hon. R.A.M., F.C.O.,

English Furor at the Paris Universal Exhibition, 1878.

The Pianos of Messrs. CHALLEN & SON possess every good quality. They are exceedingly moderate in price, and I can testify, from personal experience, to their great durability.

GEORGE GARRETT, M.A., Mus. Doc., Cantab.

Brackly Villa, Dulwich.

I have on several occasions selected Pianos from Messrs. CHALLEN & SON, and have great pleasure in stating they have invariably given complete satisfaction, some of them having had to bear the severe test of an Indian climate.

WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS, R.A.M.

CHALLEN & SON's Pianos may be purchased on the Hire System, and obtained of all the principal Musicsellers throughout the World.

LIFE OF MOZART

BY

OTTO JAHN

Translated from the German by PAULINE D. TOWNSEND.

Three Volumes, Cloth, with Five Portraits, and Preface by GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L.

Price £1 11s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

"Mr. Grove, in his brief and able preface, calls the publication in an English dress of Otto Jahn's famous biography of Mozart 'an event in our musical history,' and his statement cannot be considered an exaggeration. . . . The English public is to be congratulated upon a translation of his monumental effort which may without exaggeration be called excellent. Miss Townsend has done her work with skill and conscientiousness, and we doubt whether a much more careful comparison with the original than we have thought it necessary to undertake would discover many, or any, serious blunders."

DAILY NEWS.

"He (Jahn) has made admirable use of Nissen, with his laborious compilation, and of all other authorities, and he has succeeded in producing a work which is complete without being confusing through excess of detail, and in which the interest of the narrative is not broken by undue reference to other writers who, treating of the same points, have treated them differently and often incorrectly. . . .

The work has been well translated, and it is prefaced by a brief but interesting introduction from the pen of Mr. George Grove."

THE ATHENÆUM.

"It is with great pleasure that we are able to speak in terms of the highest praise of the manner in which Miss Townsend has acquitted herself of the by no means easy task of translation. In so voluminous a work as the present it is almost inevitable that a few slips should be found; but those that we have noted are not only extremely rare, but mostly of slight importance. . . . We have done inadequate justice in this review to one of the most important works in the whole domain of musical literature; our excuse must be the absolute impossibility of dealing fully with it within reasonable bounds. We conclude by most cordially recommending it to all who are interested in music, and need only add that the printing and general appearance of the volumes are worthy alike of their contents and of the reputation of the firm which publishes them."

VIOLINS, VIOLAS, VIOLONCELLOS, AND DOUBLE-BASSES

CRASKE.

THESE are the very best of all modern Violins, some of them fifty and sixty years old, perfect reproductions of the great masters, and equal to them in tone, workmanship, and variety. Some of them have been sold by unprincipled dealers as genuine Cremonas for very high prices, and some fairly on their own merits for as much as £240.

No man, unassisted, ever made so many Violins as "CRASKE." In addition to what he made for Forster, Dodd, and Mr. Clementi, he finished with his own hands over 2,000 Violins, 250 Violas, 250 Violoncellos, and 20 Double-Basses.

After a long and indefatigable industry Mr. Craske retired from business on an income of nearly £1,000 per annum, derived from investments in the Manchester Corporation Water Works.

The principal part of his life was spent in London, Bath, Birmingham (where he kept a shop on Snow Hill about twenty years), and Stockport, near Manchester; making also short residences in Leeds, Manchester, and Salford.

Before his retirement, Mr. Crompton bought the whole of his stock, and now has it for sale at 54, Barton Arcade, Manchester, along with a large collection of almost every noted make of Italian instruments. Manchester, April 14, 1881.

MUSIC IN ITS RELATION TO OTHER ARTS.

If we open any work or hear any lecture which professes to deal with the subject of art generally, we cannot but be struck by the absence of all critical allusion to music. Painting, sculpture, architecture are dealt with separately and comparatively. But music, from some cause or other, seems to be put aside as if it were an art sui generis, having nothing in common with the other arts, and the allusions to it are of the most general kind.

Yet the artistic principles on which music is based are the same as those which govern every other art. Indeed it is admitted that architecture and music are in one respect very near akin. They are both constructive arts, in no way dependent on any resemblance to the objects which we see around us in nature; as is, to some extent, the case in painting and sculpture.

The late Mr. Edward Barry, in his inaugural lecture delivered on his appointment to the Professorship of Architecture at the Royal Academy, said:—

"It must always be remembered that architecture, like music, is a conventional art, while painting and sculpture are imitative arts. Nature must ever be in a greater or less degree the teacher and judge of the latter; while architecture [and, he might have added, music] can be referred to no rules but its own and to that subtle sense of beauty and fitness which is implanted in the human breast."

The very fact that music appeals to the mind in a manner totally distinct from that of every other art makes this estrangement between music and the sister arts the more to be regretted. Archbishop Whateley pointed out that the force of the similes used in the Parables lies in the total dissimilarity of the two subjects in every point but the one where the resemblance is drawn. In the same way the total dissimilarity in detail and mode of expression between music and painting or sculpture enhances the value of the resemblance in the underlying artistic feeling. The unremitting concentration of thought on one subject must narrow the mind, and the object of the present paper is to counteract this error, by showing that either musician or painter may learn much in his own art and expand his mind by the study of another art which operates through a different medium.

A knowledge of music, more or less intimate, may be assumed in the readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES. It will therefore be convenient to take certain canons of those arts which appeal to the mind through the eye, as painting, sculpture, and architecture, and which may, for convenience, be termed ocular arts, and see how far the same canons are applicable to music, the aural art. In doing this we shall quote freely from Mr. Ruskin's third letter on the Elements of Drawing, for three reasons—first, the field of investigation is so large that certain data must be assumed as proved; secondly, the letter in question is generally known; and, thirdly, Mr. Ruskin's position justifies the assumption that what he says of the arts generally in that letter is proved, and that it is therefore only necessary to show that the main laws which he lays down and illustrates from the ocular arts can be equally well illustrated from music.

I. PRINCIPALITY.

Mr. Ruskin in this letter says:—

"Composition means, literally and simply, putting several things together, so as to make one thing out of them, the nature and goodness of which they have all a share in producing. . . . In all cases an intended unity must be the result of composition. . . . It is the essence of composition that everything should be in a determined place, perform an intended part, and act, in that part, advantageously for everything that is connected with it."

Further on, in the same letter, this principle is particularised by Mr. Ruskin under the head of the "Law of Principality." Mr. Ruskin says:—

"The great object of composition being always to secure unity—that is, to make out of many things one whole—the first mode in which this can be effected is by determining that one feature shall be more important than all the rest, and that the others shall group with it in subordinate positions. . . . Thus, also, good pictures have always one light larger or brighter than the other lights, or one figure more prominent than the other figures, or one mass of colour dominant over all the other masses."

The important canon of art thus laid down is really divisible into two laws, which in Mr. Ruskin's own words are:—

"First, that one feature shall be more important than all the rest; and

"Secondly, that the others shall group with it in subordinate positions."

Mr. Ruskin gives illustrations of the operation of this rule in music by showing that in a short musical phrase there is generally one note which dominates the whole passage. This however, right in itself, is not enough. The prominence of this one note in the phrase is similar to the prominence of some one feature in the principal figure of a picture. But just as there is one principal figure in a group of figures, so there is one principal phrase in a group of musical phrases. And there is this further point of resemblance—that in each case, the principal figure or the principal phrase can be isolated, but the subordinate figures and subordinate phrases cannot be isolated without destroying the homogeneous character of the composition.

If we look at Raphael's Madonna di San Sisto, to select a familiar example, or at almost any picture of the same or an earlier period, while composition in painting was simple, we see at once, not only which is the principal figure, but also, that this figure is complete in itself, and could stand alone as a picture without any one of the accessory figures. And in the same pictures we shall see that none of the accessory figures can be isolated; they only exist by their relation to the principal figure. Take, for example, the figures of the Pope and St. Barbara and the two angels in the Madonna di San Sisto. These angel faces have often been isolated—and with what result? We may daily see them in print-shops gazing up vacantly at nothing. In further illustration of this principle a few pictures in the National Gallery may be cited—Nos. 671, 227, 249, 586, 568, 700, 18, 625, 179, 804.

If we take a fugue as the highest type of musical composition based on one subject, we find it obedient to the same law of principality—or, to apply to it Mr. Ruskin's own words, the subject is the one feature "more important than all the rest;" the counter-subject and the various episodes "group with the subject in subordinate positions." Moreover, the subject of a fugue is a short musical phrase complete in itself which can be isolated, but this is not the case with the subordinate parts of the fugue, which only exist by their relation to the subject.

In music of a later date, just as in paintings of a later date, the composition is more complex, and the isolation of the principal features is not so easy. But this increases the analogy between the two arts.

In sculpture and in architecture the same pre-eminence of one feature and subordination of all others will of course be found, and is too obvious to need elaboration here.

2. SYMMETRY.

The second great canon of art is in terms almost the exact opposite of the first—namely, that where two figures or two masses of colour or of form or two musical phrases co-exist they must balance each other. This is the law commonly known as symmetry, which meets us at every step. We arrange the ornaments of our rooms on this principle, and even our candlesticks are made in pairs.

In the religious paintings of the fifteenth century we are accustomed to a crucified Christ or an enthroned Madonna with surrounding saints. The number of saints on each side of the central figure is almost always equal and happens more often than not to be two; witness the pictures in the National Gallery, the numbers of which have been given above. If we conceal the saints on one side the symmetry of the picture is lost.

In modern paintings the same principle of symmetry is observed; but it is not obtruded on the spectator with the same vigour, but delicately concealed. "Ars est celare artem."

The two western towers of a Gothic cathedral and the two columns of a Greek peristyle are obedient to the same law; just as the spire and the pediment are obedient to the law of principality. Both laws are exemplified in the Ionic screen at Hyde Park Corner, and also in the Marble Arch. Sculpture demands the same balance.

Those who have visited the church of St. John at Copenhagen will remember that force is shown in the figure of each of the apostles, force balancing force, as the figures are symmetrically arranged. But, in the Christ, Thorwaldsen has expressed the repose and rest offered in the words "Come unto Me," written above the figure, by the symmetry, the duality, of the form itself. If, perhaps, he did not realize the full value of those words, he has yet given full expression to their meaning. A small copy of the Christ, in wood, has been placed on the pulpit of St. Peter's, in Vere Street. A glance at this copy will explain our meaning, and we refer to it because there is another feature in the same church to which we shall refer hereafter. As Mr. Ruskin said, in one of his Oxford lectures:—

"The two main principles of good sculpture are—first, that its masters think, before all other matters, of the right placing of the masses; secondly, that they give life by flexure of surface, not by quantity of detail."

The manner in which the law of symmetry is observed in music could not be better described than in these words of Mr. Ruskin. The point is the right placing of the masses.

In the sonata form, with its two subjects and their attendant episodes of approximately equal dimensions, it will be seen that the underlying principle is symmetry, obtained by the right placing of the masses. And as the movement proceeds life and interest are imparted to it, not by burdening the score with fresh matter and multiplicity of detail, but by bending about the subjects which have already been enunciated in such a manner as to exhibit them in different aspects, or, as Mr. Ruskin says of sculpture, by "flexure of surface."

Musicians who know Albertinelli's "Meeting of Mary and Elizabeth," either in the original or by a copy, cannot but be struck by the resemblance in composition to sonata form. Mary is the first subject, Elizabeth the second, of almost, but not quite, equal importance, because the shadow of Mary's face thrown on that of Elizabeth maintains the superiority of the Virgin. The grouping of the architectural accessories, about the figures, is similar to the grouping of the episodes about the two subjects of a sonata.

While dealing with the canon of symmetry it will perhaps not be a waste of space to quote, from Mr. Ruskin's "Modern Painters," a passage which describes the class of pictures that most closely resemble the pure sonata form.

Mr. Ruskin ("Modern Painters," vol. ii., page 71) speaks of symmetry as "essential to the great operation of the more earnest and solemn qualities of the beautiful," especially in religious art, which he describes in the following words:—

"Equal ranks of saints are placed on each side of the picture; if there be a kneeling figure on one side, there is a corresponding one on the other; the attendant angels beneath and above are arranged in like order; and the balance is preserved even in actions necessitating variety of grouping, as always by Giotto; and by Ghirlandajo in the introduction of his chorus, like side figures; and by Tintoret, most eminently in his noblest work, the 'Crucifixion,' where not only the grouping, but the arrangement of light, is absolutely symmetrical. Where there is no symmetry, the effects of passion and violence are increased, and many very sublime pictures derive their sublimity from the want of it; but they lose proportionally in the diviner quality of beauty."

Wagner's pictures have something of this kind of sublimity.

And here, in passing, we should take note of a matter in the history of music as compared with the history of painting. The two-subject form in music is later in date than the one-subject form. In one-subject movements symmetry exists, but the law of principality predominates; in two-subject movements principality is decreased in importance and symmetry is paramount. The same tendency has been exhibited in painting and in other arts. As refinement increases, the force of independent unity melts into the delicacy of symmetric duality.

Both these laws, that of principality and that of symmetry, come to us from nature; and the development in art, from the first into the second, seems also in accordance with a law of nature—principality is the prevailing principle in the vegetable kingdom: look at a tree. Symmetry, however, predominates in the later creation of the animal kingdom. And in man we see the perfect combination of both laws.

3. REPETITION.

Much has been said of the repose which painters have obtained in pictures by the repetition of details. If repetition is a canon of any art, it most assuredly is so of music. The very idea of composition seems to involve repetition, and the word composition has been specially applied to music. The musical composition is heard, so to speak, serialism, and is not, like a picture, laid bare for inspection; so that the hearer has no power of referring back to refresh his memory as to that which has not been sufficiently impressed upon him in the first instance. It is therefore necessary that the subjects should be distinctly enunciated at the outset, and should afterwards be so referred to in whole or in part as never to be quite absent from the mind. We look for the same sort of repetition of leading features in the several façades of a building. An edifice which was Classical on one side, Gothic on another, Italian on a third, and Queen Anne on a fourth, would not be a more incongruous jumble of inconsistencies than a musical composition which went meandering from subject to fresh subject as if it had no definite aim or end. But, while repetition is thus essential to music, it may be used so as to effect one of two objects—either to give force or to give repose, and whether by force or repose to augment the unity of the composition. Now these are the words of Mr. Ruskin on the law of repetition:—

“Another important means of expressing unity is to mark some kind of sympathy among the different objects; and perhaps the pleasantest, because most surprising, kind of sympathy is when one group imitates or repeats another.”

He then cites instances from Prout, Vandyke, and Turner.

While on the subject of repetition, reference may be made to certain passages in the first volume of Mr. Ruskin's “Modern Painters.” Mr. Ruskin, speaking of the clouds which occupy the upper region of sky, states that their chief characters are, first, symmetry; secondly, sharpness of edge; thirdly, multitude; fourthly, purity of colour; lastly, variety. It would perhaps be thought fanciful to say that these are the characters of good repetition in music; but let us confine ourselves to what Mr. Ruskin says under the first and last heads. Under the head of symmetry, he says:—

“These clouds are nearly always arranged in some definite and evident order, commonly in long ranks reaching sometimes from the zenith to the horizon.”

This is a repetition of the same feature; and then, under the head of variety, he says:—

“Variety is never so conspicuous as when it is united with symmetry. . . . If through a range of barred clouds crossing half the heavens, all governed by the same forces and falling into one general form, there be yet a marked and evident dissimilarity between each member of the great mass—one more finely drawn, the next more delicately moulded, the next more gracefully bent, each broken into differently modelled and variously membered groups—the variety is doubly striking because contrasted with the perfect symmetry of which it forms a part.”

Could the varied treatment with which the musician seeks to add fresh interest of form or harmony to the successive repetitions of an oft-recurring theme be described in terms more beautiful than those quoted above?

4. CONTRAST.

The general canon of art which may be conveniently dealt with next is contrast, as being the opposite of repetition, just as symmetry is the opposite of principal-ity.

Here again it is evident that contrast is almost more essential to music than to any other art. The slow tempo is contrasted with the fast; conjunct movement with disjunct; forte with piano. But beyond these, there is of course the most obvious opportunity for contrast of every kind in a movement which is based on two subjects. One will be bold in character and loud in tone, the other soft and sweet. The notes in one case may be stately minims and crotchets, while the other sparkles in contrast with brilliant passages, like gleams of sunshine on water that is still and black with the approaching storm.

Persons far less endowed with artistic genius than Mozart or Beethoven could not fail to seize such opportunities for contrast as are thus afforded. Genius, on the contrary, displays itself in the very avoidance of these too vulgarly obvious effects. Genius delights in the production of a second subject which, while by sufficient contrast with the first it has the attraction of novelty, has yet sufficient similarity to the first subject to preserve intact the unity of thought. Again, the great charm of modulation—and modulation is the special gem of music—lies in the contrast between two keys being modified by gradual, instead of abrupt, transition.

Thus it will be seen that in the hands of the great masters, whose works we take as models, violent and sudden contrast has been refined into delicate and gradual change, both in the forms of subjects, in quantity and quality of tone, and in progression of keys.

Now this is what Mr. Ruskin says of contrast in painting:—

“Great painters do not commonly or very visibly admit violent contrast. They introduce it by stealth, and with intermediate links of tender change; allowing, indeed, the opposition to tell on the mind as a surprise, but not as a shock.”

But it must be borne in mind that the refining of contrast into change has, like gradation, of which we shall speak hereafter, been a matter of growth in music as well as in painting. Early compositions and early paintings have more abrupt contrast than those of a later date.

An historical comparison of music with painting would be out of place; but, as reference has been made to the growth of the two arts, it may be said that there are many points of resemblance between pre-Mozartian music and pre-Raphaelite painting—not pre-Raphaelitism—and between post-Mozartian music and post-Raphaelite painting. And the most remarkable resemblance is in the nature of the change in each case, and in the genius of the two men who most influenced it. Thus Bach and Giotto might stand side by side, each in advance of his age; Haydn, whose life encircled that of his short-lived pupil Mozart, with Perugino, whose life encircled that of his short-lived pupil Raphael; and the two pupils might stand side by side, and Beethoven by some great colourist like Titian or Paul Veronese.

A COMPARISON OF THE ORIGINAL AND REVISED SCORES.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

PART II.

No. 26—Aria, “It is enough.” The alterations made by Mendelssohn in this air were neither numerous nor important compared with those effected in the numbers immediately preceding. Some of them call for notice. The four bars of Adagio connecting the recitative with the song in the revised score are an addition; but, on the other hand, the theme for violoncelli enters in the MS. on the third instead of, as now, on the second bar. Moreover, the cello solo is differently treated on the entry of the voice. It stands thus in the original:—

No. 1.

It is e-nough, O Lord, now take a-way my life, for I am not bet- ter than my fathers.
p

Another variation is found in the passage leading to the cadence in C sharp minor. Here the MS. has:—

No. 2.

I am not bet - ter than my fa - thers.

Cello.

A more important change quickly follows, and, indeed, all that remains of the Adagio after the passage "Now let me die, for my days are but vanity," possesses nothing, as we now find it, in common with the older version. The movement originally ended as follows:—

No. 3.

Now let me die for my days are but

van-i-ty, I de-sire .. to live no long-er, for my days are but van-i-ty, but van-i-ty, my days are but van-i-ty.

In the Molto allegro vivace, "I have been very jealous," changes begin on the words "broken Thy covenants, thrown down Thine altars and slain all Thy prophets with the sword." The text just quoted appears in the MS. after the manner subjoined:—

No. 4.

bro - ken Thy cov - e - nants, bro - ken Thy

cov - e - nants, thrown down Thine al - tars,

Wind sustain.

thrown down Thine al - tars and slain all Thy pro - phets slain them with the sword.

The lead up to the passage in D, "I, even I, only remain," also presents a variation, Mendelssohn's after-thought being to extend it somewhat. Here is its first form:—

No. 5.

For the Lord God of Hosts, and I, e - ven I,

The remaining emendations are too slight to require notice, because involving little more than points of detail.

In the resumed Adagio we find but one change, which occurs in the last three bars. The MS. presents these as below:—

life. . .

No. 27—Recitative, "See now he sleepeth." The first form of this number is subjoined:—

No. 30—Recit., "Arise, Elijah." Here we have another example of the resolute spirit in which Mendelssohn improved his oratorio, and another proof of his deep dissatisfaction with the music so acclaimed at Birmingham. A glance at the extract given below shows that the composer originally fell back upon the Allegro vivace of "It is enough," making Elijah repeat the complainings therein expressed. It appears, also, that the Angel's recitative was first given in a very abbreviated form to the soprano voice—

THE GREAT COMPOSERS

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

No. XII.—ROSSINI (continued from page 13).

We have already seen that, when in London, Rossini signed an engagement with the French Ambassador, by which he bound himself to act as director of the Théâtre Italien for the term of eighteen months, at an annual salary of 20,000 francs. According to Fétis, it was further stipulated that he should compose not only for that house, but also for the Académie Royale, and that he escaped the second part of his task because the Minister of Fine Arts made a concession to his idleness. We do not hesitate to reject this statement in so far as it indicates a cause. Our readers will do the same. They have followed the master from his boyhood, and detected no sign of laziness, but rather proofs of prodigious industry. That Rossini was a systematic worker cannot be said. He had his own way of doing things, and it was more than a little spasmodic; nevertheless, the long roll of achievements during his Italian career should redeem that period from such a charge as Fétis brings. The era of indolence and self-indulgence had not dawned when he first settled down in the French capital.

Rossini must have been fully conscious that a struggle awaited him in Paris, where, for years past, national prejudice, jealous rivals, such as Paër, musico-literary lights in a small way, like Berton, and those who are constitutionally opposed to what is new or strange, had been in arms against him. Into the history of Rossinianism before Rossini's advent we do not propose to enter. The story has only an every-day significance, and is, in all other respects, as dead as the records of Gluck versus Piccinni, or the quarrels of the Saxon Heptarchy. Those who are curious about such matters may turn to the pages of M. Azevedo, or to those of Mr. Sutherland Edwards, where they will find the struggles and intrigues cleverly summarised. Rossini, we may well believe, anticipated a Parisian career with small alarm. He had as much confidence in his own talents as Napoleon placed in his invincible Old Guard; he knew the art of managing men, and was perfectly well aware that no circumstances conceivable could resist his power of adaptability. Wagner makes this the foundation of a clause in his contemptuous indictment of the Italian composer. "Who was, with so much power, so perfectly obliging as Rossini? If he heard that the public of a particular city was fond of having runs executed by the fair singers, while the public of another town preferred a languishing style, he gave his fair singers of the first place only runs and those of the second only languishing strains. If he found that people here liked the big drum in the orchestra, he commenced his overture to a rustic opera with the big drum. If he was informed that the audience there was passionately fond of crescendos in ensemble movements, he put his opera in the form of a continually recurring crescendo." This is, of course, a gross exaggeration, but it contains some truth, and certainly indicates the tactics adopted by Rossini in view of a Parisian success.

Hard things have been said concerning the master's work as an opera director. The place, if we may believe Fétis, did not suit his idleness. "Never did a dramatic administration show itself less active or less skilful than his. The theatre was prospering when he took it in hand; but two years were all that he needed to bring it within two fingers' length of ruin, since most of the leading artists left and the repertory became used up without his taking the trouble to replace the one and renew the other." Here we have a very definite charge; while no less positive is the statement of Mr. Edwards, supported by M. Azevedo, that Rossini "raised the Théâtre Italien of Paris to the position of the first Italian opera in Europe." Let us see how the author last-named rebuts the charge of Fétis:—

"To have brought to Paris Esther Mombelli, Mdlle. Schiasetti, Donzelli, and Rubini, is nothing, we see, since M. Fétis affirms it. To have produced 'Le Crociato' of Meyerbeer is nothing either. 'Il Viaggio a Reims,' under the direction of Rossini, was interpreted by Madame Pasta, Mdles. Esther Mombelli, Schiasetti, Cinti and Amigo, Donzelli, Zuchelli, Levasseur, Pellegrini, and Graziani. Do we often see such a number of celebrated artists in one company? Surely not. Nevertheless, behold that which constitutes the idleness and carelessness of Rossini, who also knew how to attach our Héroïde to the Italian theatre in the quality of chef du chant."

By way of supplement to the foregoing, Mr. Edwards observes, referring to a time after the master had quitted office:—

"Rossini, too, caused Malibran to be re-engaged (she had appeared at Paris some years previously, before the full development of her talent, in 'Torvaldo e Dorliska'), and introduced to the French public Sontag and Pisanoni, who appeared together in 'Tancredi,' Galli, Lablache, and Tamburini. It was Rossini, too, who discovered and brought out Giulia Grisi."

These were striking achievements, for anything approaching to which Paris would now be very thankful. Nevertheless, Rossini's engagement, when the eighteen months had run out, was not renewed. The master, in fact, was decently shelved—that is to say, he received an appointment as Inspector of Singing in France, with a salary of 20,000 francs—salary being the only substantial feature in an arrangement which provided an inspector for a practically non-existent art.

Reviewing all the facts of the case, and after reference to the chronicles of the time, the conclusion that Rossini was unfitted for his post will take no denial. Fêted and caressed in luxurious Paris, the master, erstwhile active and laborious, rapidly degenerated into a lover of pleasure. It is clear that he so neglected his duties as to make removal a necessity. Contemporary journalism cried out on all sides against his do-nothing policy, and it may be interesting to quote some of this evidence.

A writer, whose initials—M. J.—are those of Mély-Janin, published a mock funeral oration, in which he said:—

"Oh! how much to be admired is the philosophy of that ancient who wrote a book upon the advantages of adversity! It was when Plutus was unpropitious that the genius of this great composer shone forth with éclat. . . . It was at that happy time when the impresario, measuring out glory to him with liberality, and doling out gold to him frugally, shut him up in his room, and only allowed him to eat in proportion to work done. He afterwards, in England, reaped a plentiful crop of guineas, and enjoyed many a hearty laugh at the fashionables. But did they not, in that strange country, bring an action against him, and summon him by a tipstaff to compose the opera for which he had made a bargain? As if laws were made for genius! . . . It was when reposing on the bosom of luxury that he perceived the first attacks of his disease. The following were the chief symptoms: the sufferer acquired a corpulency almost supernatural; ate with an appetite seldom equalled; absorbed much, but produced little; to which was added a mortal antipathy to new music. . . . Of all his engagements he kept but one; this was to demand and pocket his money with the most scrupulous exactitude. . . . Was it not a truly brilliant stratagem to keep the 'Crociato' of Meyerbeer nine months in rehearsal, and then so happily to raise up insurmountable obstacles to its performance; afterwards to bring the composer to Paris to get up his own work, and then concert measures so well that the piece was quite ready for representation the very evening before the singers were obliged to depart? Now, some evil-disposed spirit may tell us that musical genius is not always compatible with a talent for directing."

The complaints made in the foregoing extract were repeated by a correspondent of the Harmonicon† writing from Paris:—

"It is to be hoped that it ('Le Siège de Corinth') will have the effect of restoring Rossini to that place in the public estimation, which he appears, in some degree at least, to have forfeited. If we may credit common report, the following is the manner in which he passes his days, a mode of existence that would appear to be anything but favourable to the muses and their inspirations. He seldom rises, it is said, till twelve or one, when, in order to recruit his powers, he attacks a most substantial breakfast. After this he stretches himself at ease upon his sofa and prolongs his siesta deep into the afternoon, till the wished-for hour of dinner. If not inclined to sleep he indulges in a series of reveries, either serious or playful, as the impulse of the moment may suggest; but it is said that they sometimes assume a very grave cast, in the form of meditations upon the frail nature of all human glory. Dinner is an important affair; indeed it forms the great business of the day. No ideas foreign to the moment are allowed to intrude, nor any distracting conversation that might interrupt so serious an occupation, which is prolonged till late in the evening. After this it is easy to imagine that he feels the want of repose, in order to consummate the great work of digestion. . . . Once only in the month does the director of the Buffi drag himself away from the blandishments of domestic ease, in order to take his lounge and examine the contents of the theatrical coffer. After this extraordinary effort, he returns with renewed zest to his beloved quiet. Such is the regular life which our musical philosopher is said to lead, and such the noble employments in which he spends his time."

* Vide Harmonicon, vol. iv., p. 26. † Ibid., vol. v., p. 191.

The same correspondent gives us, also, a glimpse of the condition into which Rossini's management had fallen, and the profound irritation of the public:—

"The opera was the old affair of 'L'Italiani in Algeri,' and on the rising of the curtain in the second act hisses were heard to proceed from every part of the theatre. . . . Wearied at length with the indifference, not to say impudence, with which they were treated, the public felt determined no longer to endure in silence, but to express aloud its indignation at this scandalous forgetfulness of what was due to it in right. . . . In vain did some half-dozen claqueurs, on the part of Signor Rossini, endeavour to silence the opposition. The attempt had no other effect than to redouble the hisses, and to produce a loud demand for Signor Rossini himself at the bar of the house to answer the alleged causes of complaint. There is not a town in Italy, however small, that would tolerate a company like the one which now disgraces the Italian Opera, nor is there an impresario who would dare show his face with impunity in the midst of such a state of total disorganisation."

These words were written amid rumours that Rossini had resolved not to touch a farthing of his salary until the repertory of the house had been increased by a dozen or so of new pieces. Then came a report that he had made up his mind to abdicate, leaving Paer to resume his old post, which he did, exclaiming, "What! is it in this state of desolation, after so many false manœuvres, and when the general has abandoned his army in a state of rout, that the command is given to me?"

Making due allowance for exaggeration in the extracts just given, there remains enough of solid fact, taken with the known and undisputed traits in Rossini's character to prove that at the helm of the Italian theatre he was the proverbial "square peg in the round hole." During his eighteen months' rule he produced "La Donna del Lago" (September 7, 1824); "Il Viaggio a Reims," an occasional piece, in one act, for the coronation of Charles the Tenth (June 19, 1825); "Semiramide" (December 8, 1825); "Zelmira" (March 14, 1826); and Meyerbeer's "Crociato," which appeared shortly before "Zelmira." Of these "Il Viaggio" attracted no more than momentary attention. It served a temporary purpose, and Rossini, after his manner, used some of the music in "Le Comte Ory," at the Académie Royale.

The master's appointment as Inspector of Singing, or, as one authority states, "Intendant-General of the music of all France," amused Paris greatly, and well it might. M. Azevedo says: "Gaiety still reigned with us in 1826, and the mirthful did not lose so good an opportunity of exercising their vocation. The satirical journals of the day are full of pleasantries, more or less refined, provoked by this marvellous inspection of singing; but no one laughed more loudly or joked more humorously than Rossini himself. Sometimes his friends surprised him on the boulevards, or in the streets, listening, with all possible attention, to vagabond singers, or to half-drunken amateurs, who woke the echoes with their bacchanalian strains. When they inquired his object, he answered that he was discharging the functions of Inspector of Singing, and rejoiced to find something, in default of better, to report on." Of course, the appointment was a farce, recognised as such by those most concerned; but it kept Rossini in Paris, and put him in a position to serve the Grand-Opéra without hindrance. His first work for the great French stage was "Le Siège de Corinthe," produced October 29, 1826, while, as yet, the master held power at the Italian house.

This opera is an adaptation of "Maometto," but contains several important numbers specially written. Amongst them are the famous overture, the finale to the second act, and the "Benediction of the Banners," in which we have a remarkable example of Rossini's adaptability, and witness his first decided step towards the crowning glory of "Guillaume Tell." It is naturally a subject of wonder that Rossini should have furnished up an old work for his début at the Opéra; but his faithful apologist, Azevedo, has a reason for this which may or may not deserve consideration. He says:—

"It appeared to him (Rossini) that a writer of French operas should have a profound knowledge of French pronunciation and prosody. What he had learned of our idiom in his youth, from the lessons of Santerre, and from the Academy students at Rome enabled him to sustain a conversation. But, in order to find in the heart of words the true accent which alone can give eloquent expression, it was necessary to gain an intimacy with those words by long usage, and so much he had not been able to do. Hence he would not make his bow with a work entirely new. Believe it or not, he felt himself as yet incapable of composing one worthy of him, and thus he presented himself before the French public with adaptations and amplifications of Italian operas, which left the greater portion of responsibility in prosody to the translator."

"Le Siège de Corinthe" was exceedingly well received. An eye-witness writes: "For a long time after the fall of the curtain, the pit was clamorous in its demands for the appearance of Signor Rossini, but the composer had the good sense not to submit to so stupid a ceremony. . . . After the close of the opera, a number of the musicians of the theatre repaired to the residence of Signor Rossini, where they executed different pieces from the new score of the maestro. M. Nourit sang some couplets composed extempore in honour of the Orpheus of Pesaro. This little fête, all'improvviso, was terminated by a supper party, which was attended by some of the most distinguished composers of the day." The happy result largely arose from concessions made to the taste of an audience influenced by other traditions than those of Italian lyric drama. At first nothing seemed more improbable than the success of our ornate ultramontane melodist on a stage familiar with the stately declamation of classical art. When, however, he appeared with a tragedy in which recitative, broad and dignified, had prominence, and the melodies of which were carefully shorn of roulades and elaborations intended to please Italians, the public were at once charmed and flattered. "Le Siège de Corinthe" was the first opera sold by Rossini to a publisher. His Italian works had passed into the hands of managers, and, having served their turn in representation, became anybody's property. When, therefore, M. Troupenas offered to purchase the French opera, Rossini experienced a new sensation — as pleasant as 6,000 francs could make it.

"Moïse" followed the adaptation of "Maometto," itself being a resurrection, in more glorious form, of the Italian "Mosè in Egitto." This work was brought out on March 26, 1827, and achieved a frank success, disarming the hostility even of those who would have rejoiced at an opportunity to strike. The time of preparing this opera was one of much grief to the composer, who learned from Dr. Conti, the medical attendant of his mother, that that much-loved parent suffered from mortal illness. Rossini at once resolved to leave Paris and all its concerns, in order to watch by the sick bed. This, however, Dr. Conti forbade, saying, "I formally prohibit it; your presence would kill your mother, who has an aneurism."

Seeing you, she would die at once." Rossini yielded and went on with his rehearsals, but he was greatly afflicted, and when the woman whom he loved best in all the world died, as soon after she did, the stroke was terrible. Of the music in "Moïse," and the general plan of the work, as determined by MM. de Jouy and Balocchi, the librettists, there is less need to speak because both have become familiar in England consequent upon production in oratorio form. The opera undoubtedly ranks next after "Guillaume Tell," as an exemplification of those higher qualities belonging to Rossini's genius which were not developed till the latest stage of his active career. It may be added that all Carafa's contributions to the original "Mosè" were left out of the French version, and that in consideration of the success gained the composer was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour, the decree bearing date October 14, 1827.

Rossini next turned his attention to opera of a lighter kind, and accepted from Scribe a libretto founded upon the vaudeville "Le Comte Ory," which itself sprang from an old French song. Again the master fell back upon music already written, and incorporated into his new score a good deal of "Il Viaggio a Reims." The numbers so employed were handed over to Scribe and Poisson as matter for the first act, two months being consumed in fitting French words to them. On the other hand, Rossini composed the music of the second act in fifteen days. His old facility had not left him. He was still able to pour forth "profuse strains of unpremeditated art." The new opera was first performed August 20, 1828, and met with a flattering reception. Then, says Azevedo, "Rossini saw that the moment had come to write the great work which all the world impatiently expected from his genius. By his adaptations and amplifications of 'Maometto' and 'Mosè' he had prepared the personnel of the Opéra and the French public as he desired they should be prepared, and, having studied to the bottom our taste and our idiom, he was himself ready."

The book of "Guillaume Tell" was entrusted to M. Jouy, who presented Rossini, we are told, with a poem containing 700 verses, written without reference to the composer or the exigencies of his art. Herr Richard Wagner might have approved this, as demonstrating the supremacy of the man, poetry, over the woman, music; but our master took another view, and M. Bis was called into help in making the book more workable. M. Bis soon found himself in an unpleasant position. The composer on the one side, and the academic M. Jouy on the other, harassed him past endurance. However, he wrote the whole of the second act as it stands now; and when M. Jouy had made other verses a little more lyrical, Rossini, not hard to please in such matters, professed himself satisfied. Yet how feeble, with all its patching, is the amended libretto! The authors saw this clearly enough, only they attributed it to Rossini's interference and their consequent departure from the original. So much did they take the affair to heart that a vindication appeared in print, saying: "We might have offered a more regular work to the reader; it would have been only necessary to publish it as it was first conceived; but then we should have had to restore several scenes which have been suppressed, to put in their original places others the order of which has been inverted, and to cut out some passages which owe their existence to the requirements of the music alone. Thus the printed piece would have been quite different from the piece performed; and as the spectators desire, above all, to find in the libretto what the instrumentation does not permit them to hear, the words, for the first time, perhaps, have been sent to press in exact conformity with those of the score. If, on the one hand, the natural result of this step is to offer a larger field to criticism, on the other, the public will, no doubt, be grateful to us for a slight sacrifice of self-love made in the interest of its pleasures. We also, it must be confessed, wished to pay an indirect homage to our illustrious associate. It would have been repugnant to our feelings to strike out even the defective verses, which the musical rhythm—sometimes fixed upon beforehand—obliged us to arrange as they are. There are some chords, too, so powerful, that they seem to consecrate the words to which they lend their magic. In the midst of this immense and completely new creation, which makes Rossini a French composer, 'Guillaume Tell' seems to be the work of one alone—of Rossini."

We may be sure that this artful endeavour to cast all the responsibility for and all the blame of possible failure upon Rossini troubled him very little. He knew what he had done, and why he did it, and might easily have retorted that only the sublimity of the music kept the world from perceiving and laughing at the quality of the verse. On this occasion the master did not hurry through his work in the intervals of receiving friends or going into society. He had resolved upon a chef d'œuvre which should establish him among the giants of French opera. Time and quiet were essential. So he hastened from the gay city to the country house of M. Aguado, at Petit-Bourg, and there remained for six months, in which period he finished his task, the orchestration excepted. On returning to Paris, the score was quickly completed, and the greatest lyric drama of its time awaited public judgment.

AN ACT OF AMERICAN JUSTICE.

It must be well known to our readers that there is no agreement between Great Britain and the United States with a view to secure to the citizens of either country a right of property as regards the other in literary and artistic productions. If A publish a book in England, B can publish it in America without giving the author a farthing. Similarly, if C produce a cantata in New York, D in London may, if he think it worth while, get hold of a copy and issue his own edition utterly heedless of the composer. The glaring injustice of this must be obvious even to an oblique moral vision; but the responsibility of its continuance does not rest with the mother country. England would arrange for a copyright treaty to-morrow if America were willing, but America is not willing, and "there's the rub." She thinks she has more to gain than lose by the present state of things. The balance of exchange—if so respectable a word may be ventured upon here—is all in her favour, and rather than give it up this great and sensitive nation is content to stand before the world in an attitude of confessed literary and artistic inferiority. Against a state of things so humiliating many of her worthy citizens protest by refusing to avail themselves of opportunities for doing that which the law, or want of law, allows, and not a few English authors have grateful assurance of the fact. On the other hand, a keen trading community always contains a large percentage of men who cannot afford to take conscience into business. These, seeing a questionable path carefully left open to them, fail not to walk in it, arriving ultimately at the conclusion that the meanest of mean tricks is permissible as against a foreigner whom the law refuses to protect.

Meanness, we think, can hardly go farther, or sink deeper than in the case we are about to present. A, let us say, composes an oratorio, which he assigns for a satisfactory consideration to B, who incurs great expense in printing and publishing it, looking for a fair return in the usual course of trade. Oratorio is popular in America, as here, and the music of A is greatly esteemed there, but B knows full well that he cannot reckon upon the sale of the work across the Atlantic. He may produce it cheaply, but his rivals will be almost as quickly in the market as himself and either undersell him, or turn against him resources which are on the spot, or do both. A, therefore, seeks to profit by disposing of the right of performance, which right, though not secured to him by American law, he fondly thinks his own because he holds the unpublished full score. Herein, however, he reckons without his host, or, rather, without the host of his enemies. These arrange with some convenient musician, who makes a full score out of what he sees in the pianoforte accompaniment, and straightway the foreign publisher is driven from his only coign of vantage. Observe how this "flat burglary" acts. In the first place, it damages the composer, who is misrepresented by the scoring of an inferior hand. Imagine the figure made by a Wagner, a Gounod, or any like master of the orchestra, when a musical mechanic of the class who would alone undertake such disreputable work substitutes for a complete and perfect thing a miserable simulacrum! But not only the composer is insulted and degraded. The composition suffers no less. It is put before the public maimed or distorted; it is not what it pretends to be, but a mockery, a delusion and a snare. Public taste also endures injury by such adulteration of its food, and so mischief is wrought all round in a manner and to a degree so obvious that we ought to apologise to the reader for pointing it out. As regards the publisher—and the composer also, in his business relations—the wrong suffered is of a very material and serious kind, against which every man who loves justice and fair play will earnestly protest. When conduct of this kind goes unchecked, honest business is restrained, and, indirectly, the artist: consequently his art is discouraged.

We are happy to state that the unscrupulous have just received a heavy blow and sore discouragement, administered in a quarter where, perhaps, they least expected it—their own courts of justice. It goes without saying that they seized upon Gounod's "Redemption" as soon as it appeared. The prize promised well, and with amazing celerity the pianoforte score was reprinted by them and thrown on the market, one edition even imitating exactly the appearance of the English book, and stating that it was "Novello's Edition." This, Messrs. Novello and Co. succeeded in checking, and when performances were announced with a concocted orchestral score, the law was again appealed to, and the question fairly and squarely asked of it whether no redress could be given. We gather from a recent telegram that the United States Circuit Court, sitting in Boston, granted an ex parte injunction in due course, and, after argument, made it permanent. Right has thus triumphed over wrong, and justice has been well served by its ministers. We need not point out the significance of the decision, nor, assuming that it stands against appeal, and is of force throughout the Union, are we called upon to indicate the bearing it will have upon the whole situation of great musical works in America. The action of the Court is a nail driven into the coffin of the vicious system now obtaining, and tend to show that, after all, "honesty is the best policy."

J. F. LESUEUR.

A REMARKABLE proof of the wide-spread inherent feeling for art in France is shown in the impotency of the most extraordinary political events to affect the popular and artistic expression of that feeling, so that even when that country has been suffering from the desolating throes of revolution, a prey to anarchy, or menaced by foreign foes, this insuppressible devotion to the arts has actually acquired fresh force in artists and people alike. The spirit of patriotism becomes fertile in producing memorable work in art as well as in animating with one all-controlling will the aspirations of the people. Instances have been rare in France of artists and authors living outside the vortex of social convulsion producing great work in apparent unconsciousness of the incongruity existent between their self-centred calm and the national turmoil. This is strikingly illustrated in the history of music just prior to and contemporaneous with the first Revolution and the rise of Napoleon. Gossec and Méhul, Cherubini and Lesueur—the two former from political conviction perhaps—interpreted in their works the spirit of the age, and their creations sprang into life partly from their vivid sympathy with the great events they were witnessing, and thus, in a limited sense, their utterances became the voice of the people. The revolutionary spirit affected all arts, but most notably were the stage and music made subservient to the teaching of the new cult, the supremacy of the people and the pre-eminence of the Republican idea. The classics were laid under contribution by poets and artists, the heroes of Greek and Roman poetry and history were evoked from the shadowy past, and their deeds treated with unvarying reverence and in sublime good faith. The rage for the classical became something more than a fashion. It supplied the nation with an ideal. Brutus, the father of his country, Cincinnatus, Lucretia and other noble matrons were objects of veneration. The passion for the severe and simple in art was manifested in a high degree in music, which displayed during this period an ambitious grandeur of aim, an innovating spirit, and an austerity of treatment thoroughly in harmony with the national spirit.

Of all the composers of this second period, not even excepting Cherubini, there is none who more emphatically reflected the new-born spirit of liberty and reverence for the republics of antiquity than Jean François Lesueur. The year of the Revolution, 1793, witnessed the production of his first important dramatic work "La Caverne," founded upon one of the most popular episodes in "Gil Blas." The time was eminently propitious. A few years previously the National Assembly had decreed the liberation of the theatres, a legislative act that must have greatly stimulated dramatic production. Lesueur had, however, already done much in the way of innovation, and particularly had brought upon himself much obloquy from the illiberal on account of his introduction of an orchestra in Notre Dame at the time he was maître de chapelle of the metropolitan cathedral. The ultra-orthodox and many officials objected to the employment of actors as singers in the sacred building; a controversy ensued in which Lesueur was well-supported by the press and by men of literary fame, such as Marmontel. The enemy triumphed, however, and Lesueur resigned his post, but not before the celebration of his first great work, the Messe de Noël, an oratorio in which he has illustrated his theories of dramatic music, both in the score itself and in an elaborate treatise appended to it. In his analytic commentary on this composition are found the first distinct utterances of those theories that afterwards so profoundly influenced some of his pupils and attracted much attention to his works among German composers. Lesueur here shows himself to be an inflexible upholder of the unities and the proprieties of the drama in music, and many of his theories are nearly identical with those which his contemporary Grétry advanced with even more ardour in his "Mémoires"—theories that anticipated some of the more notable and better-known views of Wagner as set forth in his "Oper und Drama."

It is curious to note that whereas in the long series of his compositions the development of Lesueur's theories of music is well-marked and their modern spirit progressively apparent, his literary style is that of the eighteenth century. It abounds in declamatory passages of rather florid rhetoric, that strike the reader of to-day as attenuated and extravagant. There is a great deal in his writing, about Nature, and the Spirit of Humanity and Sensibility, and apostrophes are addressed to these abstractions in a high-flown diction strangely out of place in polemical literature. On the other hand the author of "Les Bardes" cannot but be considered one of the most interesting, as he was the most prominent, figure in the musical history of his country during the first Consulate. Under a severe and cold exterior he possessed an ardent nature that exhausted its passion in the pursuit of his theories and the realisation of his dreams. Like most men of remarkable individuality he had his objects of idolatry, and was a firm believer in Ossian and a strong partisan of Napoleon. Even when his fame was beginning to wane before the growing power and popularity of other composers, he still exercised immense influence over his pupils, and Berlioz was proud to subscribe himself "pupil of Lesueur." Much in his literary writings is now of mere archaic interest, but his unfinished "Histoire de la Musique," which M. Boisselot is expected shortly to present to the musical world, should be awaited with interest, particularly now the compositions of Berlioz are being so frequently interpreted.

Among the distinguished men who have been pupils of Lesueur in the conservatoire, Berlioz most thoroughly represents the master, and has most courageously and consistently carried into practice his theories. In his latest publication, "Les Révolutionnaires de la Musique," M. Fouque has shown with singular success the remarkable analogy existing between pupil and master; but, without detracting from the force and ingenuity of M. Fouque's parallel, it is not unlikely that this analogy would have been far less capable of demonstration had Berlioz placed himself under Lesueur twenty years later than he did, when he would have felt the full force of the great reactionary movement against classicism that then set in. Certain idiosyncrasies they doubtless had in common; and they shared certain fervid idolatries and well-marked aversions, such as a passion for Gluck and Napoleon, and a dislike to fugues. These, being the fruit of temperament, were ineradicable; but had Berlioz studied under Lesueur at a later period it is doubtful if his earlier compositions would have betrayed much more of his master's influence than do those of M. Gounod, M. Ambroise Thomas, or other of Lesueur's pupils. Still, speculation apart, M. Fouque's critical essay is a valuable contribution to the literature of music. The early devotion of Berlioz to Lesueur has something pathetic in it when it is considered how similarly placed in the history of their art they were at the time of their death. Although each attracted to himself a fervent following of devotees, yet at the end the sense of detachment from their contemporaries and of isolation from public sympathy was common to both: with this difference—that an impetus has since been given to the movement in favour of Berlioz, whereas the composer of the Revolution has become with amateurs little better than a name. And who shall revive his operas? It were almost as vain to do so as to have expected a favourable reception of Racine's works during the triumph of the romanticism of the days of Hugo and Alfred de Musset, when the tide had turned and the old art dogmas were being swept away. Berlioz, too, had this advantage over his old master—apart from the greater technical importance of his work—that he prophesied of the coming change, and in his passion for Shakespeare and his discovery of Beethoven's symphonies possessed in anticipation the romantic affluat of the men of 1830. Lesueur, unchanging, kept his calm unswerving path to the end: one revolutionary movement being enough for one life.

SOME time ago we called attention to an instrument used in an orchestral composition the sound of which was intended to represent the rattling of the bones of skeletons; but, as works requiring such sensational aid have not multiplied, we have heard nothing more of this addition to our orchestral resources. In this case, of course, the necessities of the composer created this novel mechanical contrivance; but, if we may believe the truth of the following, it would seem that novel mechanical contrivances must eventually create a composer: "Round a circus in the Champs Elysées are supported a variety of instruments, including bells, flutes, cymbals, drums, oboes, &c., connected by wires with a keyboard in the middle of the circus. There is also, in the space below the circus, a machine similarly connected, which gives a sound as it were of earthquakes. An orchestral piece is performed on four trumpets in the centre—one of the performers, by pressing now and again an electric keyboard, bringing into action the distant instruments as required—now a drum beat, now a play of bells, imitation of bird-song, &c. He is also enabled in the same way to produce far-off detonations, and ignite blue lights." Here, then, is a wonderful accession to our instrumental force, allowing us, indeed, to combine music with noise so perfectly that the most exacting critic will scarcely be able to decide where one ends and the other begins. Of course no existing work will be available for the perfect development of this extraordinary orchestra; but no doubt the demand will create a plentiful supply. The "Earthquake at Lisbon" at once occurs to us as an excellent subject for the purpose, the "drum beat," the "play of bells," "imitation of bird-song," and the "sound as it were of earthquakes" being important accessories in such a composition. If the player, too, were to "ignite blue lights" at the end, it would only be in accordance with the habit of the late Mr. Richardson, who, in his theatrical performances at the fairs, always heightened his dramatic effects by these means.

WHEN we announced that the drum, which had been for some years abolished in the French regimental bands, had been restored, we imagined that the importance of military music in the army had been duly considered and placed upon a firmer footing than ever. We now find, however, that M. Talandier, a Deputy, has submitted an influentially signed Bill to the Chamber of Deputies with the view of reorganising the regimental bands, the existence of which he declares is threatened. In the preamble he states that in 1867 Marshal Niel suppressed the bands in the cavalry; and, with regard to those in the infantry, M. Félix Germain, in a work called the "Dictionnaire du Budget," expresses a widely prevalent opinion when he says that the millions of francs expended annually upon musicians and instruments are simply a waste of money. In order to add to the utility of the bandsmen, therefore, M. Talandier proposes that in every regiment there should be a separate company trained to perform a double service—in time of peace playing in the band and attending ambulance drill, and in time of war acting as auxiliaries to the hospital corps. It appears certainly strange that, presuming the matter to receive careful attention from qualified persons, military bands in France should warrant the assertion that the money annually expended upon them is wasted. Efficient auxiliaries to the hospital corps can no doubt be procured much more readily than good musicians; and most Frenchmen would, we imagine, prefer that the two departments should be separated, so that both may be properly filled; but if the formation of a band should eventually depend upon the selection of performers who must also undertake ambulance duties, we sincerely hope that many will be found ready and willing to uphold military music in France, even saddled with such unusual conditions.

OUR readers know that we have on several occasions referred to the subject of what is termed "colour music," and expressed our conviction of the absurdity of applying such a theory to practical use in the manufacture of an instrument. But although utterly disbelieving that a certain sound immediately suggests a certain colour, or that one key is expressive of brown, another of yellow, another of red, &c., we cannot but feel that keys differ from each other—especially on an instrument tuned according to the system of equal temperament—in another respect besides that of pitch. In a recent review upon a "Transposition Piano," therefore, we were surprised to find the following decisive opinion upon the matter: "In conclusion, it may be remarked that this mechanical transposition does not affect the chords. The belief in a diversity of acoustic tints—in which even Beethoven shared—has been proved to be fallacious, and the complete identity of the chords in any well-tuned instrument is now accepted on all sides as a fact proved beyond doubt." As Helmholtz may fairly be presumed to represent one of the "sides" in the controversy, we can scarcely understand this assertion, for he distinctly says: "There is a decidedly different character in different keys on pianofortes and bowed instruments." Space would not allow us to enter into his reasons for entertaining this conviction, but considering that one so eminent in the theory of the art agrees with one so eminent in the practice of it, we cannot see how the contrary opinion can be said to be "now accepted on all sides." The "Transposition Piano" is very useful for vocalists who wish to shift the pitch of their songs, but they must respect the feelings of those listeners who believe that by this process the character of the composition becomes altered.

By a paragraph in a contemporary, translated from the Leipzig Signale, we are informed of a strange legacy left by a gentleman lately deceased in Paris. It appears that he has bequeathed money requisite for the foundation of a stall in the Opéra. From the interest of this capital, which is to be deposited in the Bank of France, a corner seat in the third row of the fauteuils d'orchestre is to be subscribed for annually, and the use of it secured for life to one of the most intimate friends of the testator. At the death of the first occupant of this seat the gift devolves upon the Paris Conservatoire of Music, and can be awarded yearly only to a pupil of the institution who has gained a first prize. Here, then, is an entirely novel method of aiding in the education of young musical students, and, indeed, so excellent is the idea that there can be no reason why benevolent art-lovers should not during their lifetime imitate this example by founding a "stall-gift" in some recognised musical institute. We have no doubt that the pupils of the Paris Conservatoire are anxiously awaiting the time when the legacy to which we have called attention shall have become open to competition; and, as it is said that "the present owner of the stall is an old and totally deaf gentleman," we can scarcely envy his position, especially when we consider that, even against his will, he is legally compelled to act the part of the "dog in the manger."

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

THIS Society gave a performance of Haydn's "Creation," under Mr. Barnby's direction, on the 17th ult. A large audience assembled, and had reason to be well pleased, every justice being done both to the solos and concerted pieces of the work. The principal vocalists were Madame Marie Roze, Mr. Maas, and Mr. Santley, all of whom exerted themselves with their usual success, Mr. Santley being especially excellent in the music of the last part. The choruses were superbly rendered, and much credit is due to Mr. Barnby for his decisive and intelligent conducting.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

UPON the resumption (on the 8th ult.) of the present twenty-fifth series of these Concerts, Madame Norman-Néruda reappeared as the leading violinist; Herr Pachmann, the gifted Russian artist, again, for the last time this season, presiding at the pianoforte. We have already had occasion to speak in terms of high praise of Herr Pachmann's eminent qualifications as an interpreter of Chopin, and there can be no doubt that, as such, he has initiated himself at a bound into the special favour of the Popular audience, who on the evening under notice again marked their appreciation of his performance in the most enthusiastic manner. The solo pieces selected by the artist were the Polonaise in F sharp minor (Op. 44), and the Studies Nos. 6, 8, and 9 from Op. 25, by the Polish composer just named, to which, in response to a vociferous encore, he added the Ballade in A flat, also by Chopin, fully sustaining throughout his pre-eminence in the special direction indicated. The pianist was also associated with Madame Norman-Néruda in the interpretation of Beethoven's Sonata in G major (Op. 30, No. 3) for pianoforte and violin. Spohr's String Quartet in A major (Op. 93), with which the Concert opened, was brilliantly led by the lady violinist, to whom the work in question—written as it is with a preponderating regard for the leading instrument—presented an opportunity for the special display of her well-known exceptional powers, rendered all the more conspicuous by the discreet support of her coadjutors, MM. Ries, Holländer, and Piatti. The programme likewise included a masterly interpretation, on the part of the last-named artist, of the violoncello Sonata in A major by Boccherini. Two airs from Pergolesi's much-neglected "Stabat Mater," and Arne's "By the simplicity of Venus' doves," were well rendered by Miss Orridge, who deserves credit for an interesting selection. Madame Sophie Menter was the pianist on the following Saturday afternoon (the 13th ult.), Herr Straus being the solo violinist, as also the leader in Mendelssohn's String Quartet in A minor (Op. 13), in the capital rendering of which he was most efficiently supported by MM. Ries, Holländer, and Piatti. Herr Straus has long since passed muster, both here and elsewhere, as a virtuoso of his instrument, and a sterling artist, and again testified to the fact on this occasion, his solo performance, the Saltarella (Op. 55), by Molique, eliciting well-merited enthusiastic applause. Madame Menter gave an effective, albeit somewhat obtrusively "individual," reading of the "Scènes Mignonnes" (superscribed by the composer "Carnaval"), by Schumann; the lady being also associated with MM. Straus and Piatti in Beethoven's Piano-forte Trio in C minor (Op. 1, No. 3), with which the Concert concluded. Mr. Santley was the vocalist, and sang in his best manner Handel's air "Nasce al bosco" and Gounod's song "Le nom de Marie."

Mozart's String Quartet in E major (No. 8), a work full of transparent beauty and melodious grace, was the opening number on the succeeding Monday (the 15th ult.), and received a con amore interpretation at the hands of Madame Norman-Néruda, MM. Ries, Holländer, and Piatti. The lady violinist gave a fine rendering of Corelli's Sonata in D major for violin with piano-forte accompaniment, another instrumental solo being contributed by Madame Sophie Menter, who was again the pianist, consisting of a brilliant and highly characteristic interpretation of Chopin's Polonaise in A flat, which resulted in the usual encore, and the addition of another piece by the same composer. Schumann's Piano-forte Quartet in E flat (Op. 47), in the performance of which Mesdames Menter and Norman-Néruda, MM. Holländer and Piatti participated, was another number in a programme which, though presenting no novelty, was one of typical excellence, and worthy of the high standard upheld by this institution. Mr. Henderson was the vocalist. On the following Saturday (the 20th ult.) the programme included Mendelssohn's Quartet in E flat (Op. 44, No. 3); Bach's Sonata in A major, No. 2, for piano-forte and violin; Beethoven's Serenade Trio for violin, viola and violoncello; and the same composer's three Impromptus (Op. 142) for piano-forte alone. The executants were Madame Norman-Néruda, MM. Ries, Straus, and Piatti; Mr. Charles Hallé being the pianist and Mr. E. Lloyd the vocalist.

The evening Concert of the 22nd ult. was rendered specially interesting by the first production of a new work by Johannes Brahms—viz., a Piano-forte Trio in C (Op. 87)—which, together with a string Quintet in F (Op. 88), were written during last summer, both works having been recently performed for the first time, with the co-operation of the composer, at a Concert of the Museum Society of Frankfurt. In the Trio now under notice, the well-known characteristics of the leading modern representative of the classical school in Germany—viz., a somewhat hazy idealism, an occasional profundity of thought, combined with an infinity of contrapuntal device and general mastery of technical detail, leading, however, not unfrequently to over-elaboration—are all to be met with. There is, moreover, a melodious charm about some of its movements, notably the second, which cannot be said to distinguish the composer's chamber works generally, and which renders the present new addition to their number all the more acceptable. The Trio consists of an Allegro in C, an Andante con moto in A minor, a Scherzo, and a final Allegro giocoso. We shall return to the work upon a second hearing, which, judging from the highly favourable reception it met with, cannot be long deferred. It may suffice to mention Mr. Charles Hallé, Madame Norman-Néruda, and Signor Piatti as the executants on the present occasion, to indicate that the Trio was done full justice to. The pianist just named gave as his solo performance Beethoven's Sonata in F sharp (Op. 78), and, in conjunction with the lady violinist, the Sonata for piano-forte and violin (Op. 98) by the same master. The Concert also included Haydn's String Quartet in B flat (Op. 64, No. 5), in the performance of which Madame Néruda, MM. Ries, Straus, and Piatti took part. Miss Thudichum gave proofs of much talent and some good training in an air by Handel, and a song by Robert Franz in both of which she was much applauded. Mr. Zerbinì officiated as accompanist on all occasions.

BOROUGH OF HACKNEY CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

The second Concert of the season was given at the Town Hall, Shoreditch, on the 22nd ult., the programme consisting of Cherubini's Mass in D minor, and Mozart's music to "King Thamos," the last-named work being given for the first time in England. The selection of Cherubini's Mass for performance before an East-end audience, showed either that Mr. Prout, the energetic conductor of the Society, had thorough confidence in the intelligence of his hearers, or that he was resolved under any circumstances to place good music before them and abide the result. Judging from the reception of the composition throughout, however, we have no reason to believe that he could have made a better choice; for each movement was received with those spontaneous marks of approbation which left no doubt of the appreciative powers of the auditors. The choruses were finely rendered, all the points being attacked with precision and vigour, the sopranos, especially, sustaining the high notes, not only with due confidence, but with a certainty of intonation which fully justified such confidence; the balance of tone in the choir, too, being admirably preserved. The solo vocalists were Miss Eleanor Farnol, Madame Clara West, Miss Orridge, Messrs. Bernard Lane, A. J. Neale, and Lucas Williams, all of whom were thoroughly efficient. The performance of the music to "King Thamos" was highly interesting; for although the three choruses in the work are known, as adapted to sacred words (with some modifications), their power of illustrating the events of the drama to which they were originally written was revealed, at least in this country, for the first time. Although all the choruses are not only excellent as musical compositions, but remarkable for sympathy with the text, certainly that which opens the work, "Before thy light, Sun-God," and that which closes it—preceded by a solo for the High Priest—may be cited as the gems; and now that they have been heard in their true form, we hope that choral societies will avail themselves of the treasure placed before them. The instrumental movements which illustrate the action of the drama are unequal in merit, but those which come immediately after the second and the fourth acts delighted all hearers, especially as, in the copy recently published by Messrs. Novello, the meaning of each portion of the music is placed over it. Both the vocal and instrumental movements were admirably rendered, the solo singers being the same as those in the Mass. The orchestral accompaniments were thoroughly satisfactory, and the success of the concert was ensured by the admirable conducting of Mr. Prout.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

A DECADE has now elapsed since—one of the many reforms effected by the present members of the Cathedral body—the Dedication Festival has been adequately observed and celebrated in St. Paul's Cathedral. Those who remember the Cathedral services prior to 1873, both on St. Paul's Day and other days alike, will best estimate the influence which good music, properly interpreted, is capable of asserting over an immense mass of people—such, for instance, as that which thronged the Cathedral from end to end at the afternoon service on Thursday the 25th ult.

Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," the selection from which forms the actual feature of the Festival, needs no critical remark here, and the portions of the oratorio chosen were the same as in previous years; of the rendering they received we may remark that little was left to be desired. The chorus was excellent in all ways, and although the treble solo portions were perhaps scarcely up to the standard of some former occasions, the tenor and bass recitatives and solos, entrusted to Messrs. Kenningham, De Lacy, and Winn, were fully equal to any of their predecessors. Mr. C. V. Stanford's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, composed for the Sons of the Clergy Festival of 1880, were repeated, and confirmed the good opinion expressed in many quarters at the time of their production; and the whole Festival reflected the highest credit on Dr. Stainer, its conductor and, we may perhaps add, its organiser.

But it is not by this afternoon Festival only that the day is now marked—a midday celebration of the Holy Eucharist is now an important feature; and Weber's Mass in E flat, adapted to the English words—in many cases a mere translation—showed how effectively the music written for the Latin Church may be used by the Anglican

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THERE has been rather more animation here in musical matters during the past month than is customary during the holiday season, and, apart from the conventional Christmas performances of sacred music, several secular Concerts of exceptional interest have been given. "The Messiah" apparently is losing something of its old attraction for our local public, and in place of two or three overflowing Town Hall audiences, as in former years, the single performance of the work given by the Festival Choral Society in Christmas week drew but a mediocre attendance. The principals on this occasion were Miss Clara Samuell, Miss Helen D'Alton, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. John Bridson, with Mr. Robinson as solo trumpeter, Mr. Stimpson as organist, and Mr. Stockley conductor. The band and chorus, numbering over 350 performers, were of course familiar with this work, and the general results were all that could be desired.

The Birmingham Philharmonic Union, under Dr. Swinerton Heap's direction, gave a very interesting Concert on the following evening, when Hiller's "Song of Victory," Macfarren's "May Day," Villiers Stanford's Orchestral Serenade in G major, three movements from Beethoven's Second Symphony, Max Bruch's "Loreley" Overture, and the Overtures to "Athalie" and "William Tell" constituted the chief features of the programme. The "Song of Victory," which was heard here for the first time on this occasion, impressed the audience very favourably by its broad, dignified, melodious character and musicianly structure—the third, fourth and fifth numbers being especially applauded. Macfarren's "May Day," produced at the Bradford Festival of 1856, exhibited the chorus at its best, though a somewhat larger body of voices was needed to do full justice to the more clamorous numbers. The band was a fairly good one, but Mr. Stanford's Serenade would have fared better after another rehearsal. The "Loreley" Overture, which delighted every one by its picturesque and melodious qualities, was better played than the Overture to "Athalie." Miss Anna Williams was heard to great advantage in the "Song of Victory" and "Let the bright seraphim," and Signor Foli won much applause by his singing of songs by Mozart, Wallace and Gatty.

On the afternoon of the 6th ult. the musical section of the Midland Institute gave an orchestral Concert, of which the principal features were the Overtures to "Alfonso and Estrella" (Schubert), and "Tannhäuser" (Wagner), Haydn's second "Salomon" Symphony, Spohr's dramatic Concerto for violin, Sterndale Bennett's Fantaisie-Overture "Paradise and the Peri," and an excerpt from Sullivan's "Tempest" music. The Schubert Overture, composed in 1823, was given here on this occasion for the first time, and met with a cordial reception, in virtue of its melodious and romantic qualities. The Haydn Symphony in D, the first produced under the composer's direction after his arrival here in 1791, would have been all the better for another rehearsal. Sterndale Bennett's graphic Overture was capitally played, and the Dance of Nymphs and Reapers from the "Tempest" music produced a great effect. In Spohr's eighth Concerto Mr. F. Ward displayed rare technical ability and breadth of style. Mr. Stockley's conducting throughout was judicious.

Mr. Stockley's third orchestral Concert, on the 18th ult., was in some respects the finest of the series, though less conspicuous than its predecessors for novelty. Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony and "Athalie" Overture, Beethoven's grand "Leonora" Overture, No. 3, Schubert's Overture to "Alfonso and Estrella," and Massenet's "Scènes Pittoresques" were the chief orchestral features, and of these two had been heard under less favourable conditions, it is true, only a week or two previously at the Midland Institute. The performance generally was spirited and effective, though occasionally wanting in refinement. The Symphony apparently had been well rehearsed and went smoothly nearly throughout, and, considering its difficulty, the "Leonora" Overture was most creditably played. Parts of the "Athalie" Overture and the Massenet Suite were a little coarse in the execution of the wind passages, but on the whole the playing of the band, which now musters eighty performers, left little to be desired, and revealed much that entitled both performers and conductor to warm commendation.

At the fourth Popular Chamber Concert of Mr. Stratton, on the 29th ult., Svendsen's String Octet in A major and Onslow's String Quintet (Op. 17) were the leading features of the concerted music. Dr. Heap played Mendelssohn's "Variations Sérieuses" and Chopin's Ballade in G minor, besides joining Mr. F. Ward in Rubinstein's Pianoforte and Violin Sonata (Op. 19).

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A REMARKABLY good performance of Spohr's "Last Judgment" was given in the Cathedral on December 21, being the last of the three annual Advent Services. Soloists, choir (numbering 250), and orchestra were entirely local, and the Oratorio went without a hitch from beginning to end. The great "Destroyed is Babylon" chorus, with its weird concluding symphony, was perhaps the most noteworthy feature, but the work, as a whole, has never been better done in the provinces. Beethoven's C minor Symphony was played as a voluntary during the offertory, the effect of the slow movement being grievously marred by the jingling of coin, poured from the offertory bags into the brass basin after a fashion peculiar to Bristol Cathedral. Mr. Riseley conducted, and Mr. Hill was at the organ. The audience would doubtless have been larger but for the objectionable system of admittance, which was by "Books of Words," sold at different prices for different parts of the cathedral. If it is necessary to turn churches into concert-rooms, with reserved and unreserved seats, it were better to be at least honest about it, and not to sell tickets under the flimsy disguise of "Books of Words."

On New Year's Eve, Haydn's Sixteenth Mass was given, with full choir and orchestra, at St. Mary's (Roman Catholic) Chapel, for the first time in Bristol.

The 11th ult. was the annual "Ladies' " night of the Madrigal Society, and there was the usual gathering of visitors from all parts of the West and even further. The performance, however, for the last year or two has not been so entirely satisfactory as of old, owing to the want of strength in the trebles, who are occasionally quite overpowered by the men's voices, which are exceptionally rich and full. The choir is excellent in attack, and has plenty of fire and vigour, but a more definite pp. now and then would enhance the effect of the massive ff. Another exception we take to these Concerts is the enormous number of "encores" demanded and given, without any apparent regard to the merit or otherwise of the performance. Certainly the madrigal least well sung on the 11th ult. was Pearsall's "In dulci jubilo," yet this was vociferously redemanded and given in its entirety. Taking it all round, we do not suffer so much as many other places from the "encore nuisance," thanks to the Conductor of the Monday Populars, who does not permit repetition at any of his Concerts; but there is a certain section in every audience which clamours for "encores," and if it is found advisable occasionally to accede to them, it surely would be sufficient to repeat merely a portion of the composition in question, instead of giving the whole again, as at the Madrigal Concerts. The programme on this occasion was as follows, Mr. Reay being called for at the conclusion of his part-song, which was amongst those encored: "I saw lovely Phillis" (Pearsall), "I follow" (Morley), "Up, up, ye dames" (Macfarren), "Lady, when I behold" (Wilbye), "Thine am I, dearest" (Monteverde), "Sweete Floweres" (Walmisley), "The Nightingale" (Weelkes), "The Shepherd's Farewell" (Smart), "No din of rolling drum" (Striggio), "My bonny lass" (Morley), "Come, let's join" (Reay), "Let me, careless" (Pearsall), "Flow, oh, my tears" (Benet), "Lullaby" (Leslie), "The Shepherd's Pipes" (Marengio), "Victors' Return" (Mendelssohn), "The Waits" (Saville). Mr. D. W. Rootham conducted.

Madame Sophie Menter gave a Pianoforte Recital at the Victoria Rooms on the 22nd ult., and received so warm a reception that she will, we hear, shortly revisit Bristol.

The People's Concert Society gave a second performance (by request) of Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch" also on

TIMES.

"There is every reason to think that the almost unprecedented power of attracting the public which this remarkable work has proved to possess in the provinces and in London is not likely to be exhausted for a long time to come."

TELEGRAPH.

"The business of this [the Brighton] Festival came to an end on Saturday afternoon with a performance of M. Gounod's 'Redemption.' There was an overflowing audience, gathered from all the country round, and influenced by the utmost curiosity as to the latest-born of oratorios."

ATHENÆUM.

"Gounod's 'Redemption' [at Bristol] naturally attracted a crowded audience, every seat in the large hall being filled. The work unquestionably improves on acquaintance."

GLASGOW HERALD.

"The first performance in London of M. Gounod's sacred masterwork was given to-night at the Royal Albert Hall in the presence of such an audience as is rarely seen even in that magnificent building. . . . Although the numbers could not be accurately told to-night, it is estimated that upwards of 11,000 persons were present."

WOLVERHAMPTON EVENING EXPRESS.

"On Monday evening the first of the Wolverhampton Festival Choral Society's concerts for the current season was given at the Agricultural Hall, Gounod's 'Redemption' being rendered with a band and chorus numbering nearly 300 performers. . . . It is creditable to the musical taste and appreciation of our town that never was a concert here better attended than that at which the life-work of the greatest living composer was performed."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

"The second concert of the current series, which took place in the Town Hall last night, brought together one of the largest audiences ever assembled there, not merely at the concerts of this society, but at any musical entertainment. The occasion was the first performance here since the Festival of the great work which is destined to make that Festival memorable, and the production of which certainly marks an epoch in the history of musical art."

NEW YORK HERALD.

"The work has been so thoroughly described in these columns that it is only necessary now to say that the promises held forth as to its popular and artistic merits were fully realised last evening, and that Gounod's 'Redemption' was accepted as a complete and absolute success."

JASON

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

For Solo Voices, Chorus, and Orchestra,

THE POEM WRITTEN BY

WILLIAM GRIST

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

A. C. MACKENZIE.

Octavo, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.

TIMES.

"Mr. Mackenzie is in every sense a modern composer. There is in his music no trace of the slavish imitation of Mendelssohn which, for years after the death of that great composer, impeded the progress of any national or independent growth of musical art among us. . . . How the composer has accomplished his task of illustrating the action I cannot for the present explain at such length as the music deserves. I may, however, say in summary fashion that Mr. Mackenzie's 'Jason' contains more clever writing and more genuine inspiration than are to be found in any English Cantata produced during recent years, with the sole exception, perhaps, of Mr. Cowen's 'St. Ursula.'"

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"An orchestral intermezzo, 'On the waters,' represents the voyage from Hellas to Colchis. This is a charming number, orthodox as to form, and poetic in spirit as though the composer of 'Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage' had written it. Indeed, Mendelssohn could not have been far from Mr. Mackenzie when he conceived this fresh and breezy music."

STANDARD.

"The Cantata of 'Jason' is not only his most pretentious, but also his most successful work. Its bright, melodious numbers will, in all probability, soon become popular. 'Jason' is described as a dramatic Cantata for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra. It is exceedingly clever in construction, and the orchestration is peculiarly picturesque in places."

DAILY CHRONICLE.

"'Jason' is a composition characterised by vivid imagination, grace, and power, and it marks a further advance upon the road on which Mr. Mackenzie has already made such satisfactory progress. The Cantata left a great impression upon the audience, and the composer was heartily greeted at the conclusion from all parts of the hall."

ATHENÆUM.

"We regret that our space will not allow us to analyse 'Jason' in detail. Mr. Mackenzie's style, though not free from signs of the influence of Schumann and Wagner, shows considerable individuality; of direct reminiscences there are very few. Among the best portions of his new work are the vigorous and spirited opening chorus, broken by a charming tenor solo; the chorus 'See, the All-father approves from above'; the following intermezzo for orchestra, entitled 'On the Waters,' a lovely instrumental picture of which any living composer might be proud; Medea's scena; the duet between herself and Jason; the chorus of armed men; and the whole finale."

WEEKLY DISPATCH.

"It may be premature to express so decided an opinion, but I am inclined to think 'Jason' is the finest Cantata ever penned by an English composer. It is not only scholarly in a high sense, but is written with a freedom of resource and a command over the various forms of expression not often equalled. The choruses are splendid, the melodies generally striking and unconventional, and the orchestration is exceedingly rich and varied."

LONDON: NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

the 22nd ult. The principals were the same as on the former occasion, including Miss J. Jones, Madame Bailey, Mr. Harper Kearton, and Mr. Montague Worlock. Mr. Whittaker conducted.

The Bristol Musical Association gave its twelfth Concert on the 27th ult., the programme containing only a miscellaneous selection.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

WE were unable to notice in the last number of THE MUSICAL TIMES the performances of Spohr's "Last Judgment" at the Leeds Parish Church, and of part of Bach's "Christmas Oratorio," at St. Martin's, Potternewton, near Leeds; both of these occurred late in December. In the former case Dr. Creser's excellent choir acquitted itself well; in the latter the want of a conductor was shown by some unsteady singing on the part of the chorus.

On the 9th ult. an interesting Chamber Concert was provided in the Huddersfield Town Hall as one of a course of "Highfield Lectures," the principals being Mr. Carrodus (violin), M. Van Biene (violinello), Mr. Walter Parratt (piano), and Mrs. Hutchinson (vocalist); Beethoven's Trio in G major, and Mendelssohn's in D minor were given, and the latter received a genuine con amore rendering. Mr. Parratt's playing of Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor was something to be remembered, and the same may be said of Mr. Carrodus's execution of Viextemps' "Réverie." M. Van Biene received an encore for his performance of selections by Mendelssohn and Popper, and Mrs. Hutchinson, though not entirely successful in all her songs, created a very favourable impression in Bach's "My heart ever faithful."

The 10th ult. saw another performance of Berlioz' "Faust," this time in the Leeds Town Hall, where it had not been presented before, Mr. Hallé having only given it at Huddersfield and Bradford. On this occasion Mr. R. S. Burton was the conductor, and the principals were Miss Davies, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. King, of whose singing it is surely superfluous to speak, such is their reputation in connection with this remarkable work. The band, as is only too often the case in Leeds, was a mixed one, and naturally showed more to advantage in the vigorous numbers, although others, and particularly the "Ballet of Sylphs," were played with no little taste. Mr. Carrodus was the principal. The chorus—taken from the Bradford Festival Choral Society—was on the whole successful in coping with the difficult music, but did not always attack the leads with decision. Mr. Thornton Wood gave an energetic and spirited rendering of Brander's song.

Mr. Charles Hallé gave his second Orchestral Concert at Huddersfield, in the Town Hall, on the 15th ult. Cherubini's "Anacreon" Overture, which is somewhat of a novelty to a Yorkshire audience, opened the first part of the programme, and Wagner's "Tannhäuser" Overture, which was splendidly played, was the first item in the second part. Raff's "Leonora" Symphony was the most important composition performed, and few could take any exception to the performance. No less successful were the united efforts of Mr. Charles Hallé and his orchestra in Mendelssohn's "Sérénade and Allegro gioioso." A "Nocturne" and a "Ballade" of Chopin were played by Mr. Hallé as his solo, and, of course, pleased the audience; it is, however, to be regretted that Mr. Hallé confines himself so much to one class of compositions. Miss Lemmens made her first appearance in Yorkshire, and her style of singing, with which but little fault can be found, elicited loud expressions of approval.

On the 17th ult., the second Concert of the Leeds Philharmonic Society was given, the programme consisting of vocal solos, part-songs, and instrumental music. The vocal portion of the concert was chiefly remarkable for the fine singing of Mr. Frederick King, who, amongst other songs, gave Sullivan's "Thou'rt passing hence" with remarkable effect. Mrs. Alfred Broughton's rendering of Liszt's "Know'st thou the land?" was also of considerable merit. The chorus distinguished itself in Eaton Fanning's "Liberty," a veritably "dramatic" composition, and in two German "Volkslieder"—"In Silent Night"

(harmonised by Brahms), and "The Enchanted Nightingale" (harmonised by Otto Goldschmidt). Herr Holländer (violin), Mr. Gibson (viola), M. Libotton (cello), and Mr. Alfred Broughton (piano), were associated in two Quartets—Beethoven's in E flat, and Schumann's in E flat—and in the latter a high standard of excellence was reached. Herr Holländer's solo—"Wieniawski's" "Airs Russes" was encored, and M. Libotton's execution of Popper's "Preludium and Tarantella" was vociferously applauded. Mr. James Broughton conducted with his wonted ability.

The Fourth Bradford Subscription Concert on the 19th ult., was memorable for a performance of Beethoven's "Sinfonia Eroica," by Mr. Charles Hallé's orchestra. This stupendous work was played brilliantly, and listened to with the closest attention; Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture, and Wagner's Overture to "Rienzi," were also loudly applauded by the audience. Mr. Charles Hallé again played a "Nocturne" and "Ballade" of Chopin, the same as at Huddersfield on the 15th, and in response to an encore, gave two Waltzes by the same composer. Miss Lemmens sang so well that she was recalled after each appearance; Handel's air—"From mighty Kings" (Judas Maccabæus)—was decidedly the most successful of her three selections.

The preliminary work of the approaching Leeds Musical Festival has commenced in earnest. Mr. Arthur Sullivan has again been appointed conductor, and Mr. James Broughton will as before act as chorus-master; the work of testing voices has already begun, under Mr. Broughton's superintendence. Though not yet finally settled, the Festival will probably be held on October 10, 11, 12, and 13.

GOUNOD'S "REDEMPTION" IN AMERICA.

THE success of Gounod's Oratorio "The Redemption" both in New York and Toronto seems to have fully equalled that in England; and as it proceeds on its travels there can be little doubt that the estimate of the composition written by M. Gounod upon his opus vita mea score, will be fully endorsed by the musical nations of the world. The production of the work for the first time in America, on December 6, at Steinway Hall, New York, which was crowded by a thoroughly appreciative and critical audience, appears to have created an extraordinary impression. The New York Tribune in the course of an excellent and exhaustive notice says:—

Any work which presents the Man of Sorrows with tender reverence, especially in the supreme moments of His Passion, and after that shows Him received into glory, so that compassion is touched and sympathy is gratified, has an enormous advantage to begin with. M. Gounod's work has the further advantage of a text which in design is distinctly a work of genius. These advantages go far, but in art it is not enough to conceive a noble subject nobly; and in his text and in his explication of it M. Gounod has himself supplied the lines by which the adequacy of his musical expression must be measured. Applying them, the work will not appear "entirely great." But it is fine, in a high sense, full of ingenuity and resource, kept pure and free from trick and small device—as we have already said, sincere, serious, significant. We may be grateful for so much, remembering how rarely a masterpiece is wrought.

After minutely describing the characteristics of the work the notice concludes with the following:—

But the glory of the performance was the chorus, which, played upon like the orchestra, and responsive like it, must surely have been, in balance, in sustained quality of tone, in purity of intonation, in readiness and vigour of attack, and in extraordinary clearness and completeness of phrasing, a surprise to everybody. The performance was very warmly received, and, as we have before said, we consider it certain that the work will be more and more admired at every hearing.

The Evening Telegram says:—

So much has been written of this composition on both sides of the Atlantic, that one hesitates to add another word, or to express another view to the thousands that have been given to the public by thoughtful musicians and able critics. These have set their hands upon the score and pronounced it grand, artistic, scientific, and entitled to immortality. The libretto is so simple, straightforward, and reverential, that it must endure so long as faith in Christianity shall abide. Therefore it may seem unnecessary and almost impossible to advance another opinion on the subject. Still it is right to swell the chorus of praise. The "Redemption" is a grand composition, full of marvellous features well calculated to surprise and charm the cultivated musician.

The New York World speaks thus of the work:—

It is, taken all in all, the composer's greatest production. There is much in the score equal in tender grace to the loveliest passages of "Faust," with scenes carried out in grander proportions than any in the composer's previous compositions.

The following is from the New York Evening Post :—

He calls it a "Sacred Trilogy," but there is no reason why it should not be called an Oratorio, considering how great are the differences between the various kinds of stage plays classed together as "Operas." From the older Oratorios "The Redemption" differs chiefly by the omission of arias and the transference of the melody from the vocal parts to the orchestra, which in Gounod's hands often becomes a vivid mass of rich or delicate colours.

The Independent says :—

The Trilogy has undoubtedly created an enduring place for itself already in New York, as well as in the city's vicinity, and we congratulate Mr. Thomas and the Chorus Society on their possession and interpretation of its score.

The Journal of Commerce says :—

An extremely critical audience at the first performance of Gounod's work in America attested his hardy-won triumph. "The Redemption" is original and full of solemn and plaintive airs, recitatives, choruses and concerted pieces worthy of the theme. It bears no resemblance to "The Messiah," with which comparisons are inevitably made by the thoughtful hearer. Gounod is unlike Handel, or Haydn, or Beethoven. He has added an entirely new style to the varieties of Oratorio by "The Redemption," as to those of Opera by "Faust."

Of the performance in Toronto the local papers have written at great length. The Globe says :—

The production of so great a work for the first time in Canada, by a combined chorus and orchestra larger than has ever before been brought together in Toronto, is an event of no ordinary interest. The venture on the part of the Philharmonic Society was a bold one, but, thanks to the energy of the officers, the zeal of the active members, and the liberality of the public, it has resulted in a most unqualified success.

Then follows a full description of the work, and the notice thus concludes :—

The President, Mr. Nordheimer, took the platform at the close of the second part and briefly addressed the audience. In his remarks he stated that only three cities had yet had the honour of a "Redemption" performance—viz., Birmingham, under the composer's direction, New York, under that of Theodore Thomas, and Toronto under the popular conductor Mr. Torrington.

Of the Finale to the second division of the work the Toronto Mail writes :—

Then occurs the grandest effort of the composition, "The Ascension Scene." The Finale is wrought out by the employment of two choirs—celestial and terrestrial—the triumphant fanfare of the trumpets from above, and the combination of the whole choral and orchestral forces supported by the power of the organ in the development of a gigantic chorus, "Unfold, ye portals everlasting." The orchestra closes this most exciting number by the fortissimo delivery of the Redemption motive, which is then heard for the last time. It might be mentioned here that so unmistakable was the effect of this Finale that it had to be repeated last night to satisfy the enthusiastic calls of the audience.

Of the effect of the recitatives the Toronto World says :—

This is greatly due to its dramatic concentration and to the richness of colouring in the orchestral accompaniments, which distract very largely the attention of the audience from the movement of the story. The choruses mainly, however, are marvels of close choral writing, with rich melodic and harmonic effects, while the orchestration is masterly in the extreme. The established canons of musical composition are often set aside, and the most startling chords and discords show themselves as figures in a phrase which at its completion justifies the composer's boldness. The purely orchestral movements are characterised by a strength, dignity and gorgeousness of phrase and colour that is met with only in the works of Liszt and Wagner among the composers of the present day, and which will undoubtedly herald a new era in the treatment of religious subjects.

The Hamilton Times says :—

The success which has attended the representation of the work elsewhere naturally led to high anticipations in Toronto, which, it is not too much to say, were fully realised.

And in a letter from a correspondent, addressed to the editor of Music and Drama (New York), we read :—

The chorus and orchestra—the former over 400, the latter seventy—were more than satisfactory, and the audience became wild in their determination to have the chorus "Unfold, ye portals everlasting" over again. I must say I never saw people on the platform and off it so much stirred by any other Oratorio, and, speaking for myself, I cannot express to you the deep impression it has made upon me. "Redemption," in my opinion, will always hold its own and accomplish a mission that will result in good to all, but it should never be given in any but a devotional spirit, as it is essentially sacred.

GOUNOD'S "REDEMPTION" IN SCOTLAND.

DURING the past week Gounod's "Redemption" has been performed in the three principal towns in Scotland—at Edinburgh by the Edinburgh Choral Union, on the 22nd ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Adam Hamilton; at Glasgow by the Glasgow Choral Union, on Tuesday, the 23rd ult., under the conductorship of Mr. August Manns; and at Dundee by the Dundee Choral Union, on Wednesday, the 24th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Henry Nagel. Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Hilda Wilson, and Mr. Joseph Maas sang the principal soprano, contralto, and tenor parts at all the Concerts, and the bass parts were undertaken by Mr. Santley at Edinburgh and Glasgow, and at Dundee by Mr. Henry Blower. The orchestra on each occasion was that of the Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Concerts, comprising seventy performers, under the leadership of M. Victor Buziau. The production of this interesting work in these towns has been looked forward to with much interest, and the performances, which took place before crowded audiences, were entirely successful.

OBITUARY.

THE death is announced, on the 24th ult., of Frederick Ferdinand Adolf von Flotow, who was born, April 27, 1812, at Rentendorf, in Mecklenburg. Destined for the service of the State, his passion for music declared itself so strongly when he had attained his sixteenth year, that the family abandoned their original purpose, and permitted him to follow the bent of his inclination. Flotow studied composition with Reicha in Paris, and made his début there with an opera—"Pierre et Catherine." Several other works, now forgotten, quickly followed, and brought him little fame. A greater mark was made by "Le Naufrage de la Méduse," which had a considerable run in France and Germany. Continuing his labours with varying fortune, Flotow at length composed a one act ballet, "Lady Henriette," which he subsequently expanded into his most famous work, "Martha" (1843). In 1844 appeared "Stradella," which was followed by several other operas, including "L'Ombre," produced a few years ago in London. Flotow was certainly not a great composer, but his name will be perpetuated by "Martha," wherein his best qualities as a pleasing melodist are gratefully recognised.

THE South London Choral Association's fourth Concert of the season was given at the Institute of Music, Camberwell, on Tuesday evening, the 23rd ult., the programme consisting of selections from Haydn's "Creation" and Mendelssohn's "Elijah." The familiar choruses in both works were interpreted with a degree of precision worthy of the highest eulogium, and Mr. Leonard Venables may be well congratulated upon the possession of one of the first choral bodies in the metropolis. The fine chorus in the last-named work, "Thanks be to God," elicited enthusiastic applause, to which the Conductor, contrary to his usual commendable practice, had at length to comply by a repetition of the number. Miss Annie Matthews gained decided praise for her singing of the soprano solos, and Miss Hellis for the contralto air "O rest in the Lord." Mr. Franklin Clive acquitted himself in a very satisfactory manner in the principal bass parts in both works. The accompaniments were creditably executed by the Society's orchestral band, under the leadership of Mr. T. E. Gatehouse. The subject of the previous Concert, given on December the 21st, was the annual Christmas performance of "The Messiah," which attracted the usual crowded audience.

The Musical Review, a weekly journal, the first number of which appeared on the 6th ult., is a welcome addition to those periodicals the object of which is to educate the people to the appreciation of the highest works in art, rather than to reflect the taste which exists. A feature in the Review is the publication of short poems by writers of eminence; and amongst the contents of the three numbers before us may be cited some excellent letters on "Music in Italy," by the celebrated critic, Filippo Filippi; reviews of Liszt's Pianoforte Works, by E. Dannreuther, with illustrations in music type: a notice of the Musical Instruments in Rossetti's Pictures, by A. J. Hipkins; a series of papers on "Music in Theatres," and several letters from correspondents, including one from Mr. George Grove on "Words and Music." Besides the editorial articles, we have "Occasional Notes" on the topics of the day, with reviews on new music, and criticisms upon musical performances, both at home and abroad. The journal is excellently printed, and evidently carefully edited,

THE prospectus of the Philharmonic Society for the coming season announces six Concerts at St. James's Hall, the first of which will take place on the 15th inst. A motett, by Cherubini (never before heard in public), the MS. of which has been placed at the disposal of the Society by Her Majesty the Queen, and the "Pastoral Symphony," and "March of the Three Holy Kings" ("Christus"), by Liszt, are the positive novelties promised from foreign composers; and contemporary native talent will be represented by a symphony written expressly for the Society by Mr. A. C. Mackenzie, and a Prize Orchestral Overture, to be competed for by British composers. Schumann's "Hermann und Dorothea" Overture, Wagner's Introduction to "Parsifal," Berlioz' Overture "Les Francs Juges," the tenor air from "Lelio," and a selection from his "Faust" (including the "Ballet des Sylphes," and the "Grand Hungarian March") will also be interesting additions to the repertory of the Society; and the programmes will also include selections from the works of Beethoven, Bach, Mendelssohn, Weber, Mozart, Cherubini, Spohr, Raff, Sterndale Bennett, Wagner, and Berlioz. Sir Julius Benedict, it must also be said, has promised to write a vocal scena for one of the concerts. Amongst the artists already engaged, or with whom engagements are pending, are Mesdames Christine Nilsson, Albani, Rose Hersee, and Patey; Messrs. Edward Lloyd, Henry Maas, Frederick King, and Santley; Madame Sophie Menter, Madame Essipoff, and Madame Schumann, and Senor Sarasate, his first appearance in England since 1879. Mr. W. G. Cusins retains the post of conductor.

A FESTIVAL of Village Choirs, in connection with the Oswestry School of Music, under the presidency of Mr. Henry Leslie, will be held on Saturday morning and evening, April 21. The following competitions are announced: 1. By the Village Choirs, for the Banner of Honour, and the Ladies' Banner, a Second Prize; 2. For Members of Village Choirs under 15 years of age, Prizes of £3 and £1 10s.; 3. For Members of Town Choirs under 15 years of age, Prizes of £3 and £1 10s.; 4. Sight Singing and Knowledge of Elementary Music, Members of Village Choirs under 15 years of age, Prizes of £2, £1, and 10s.; 5. Sight Singing and Knowledge of Elementary Music, Members of Town Choirs under 15 years of age, Prizes of £2, £1, and 10s.; 6. Village Schools under Government Inspection in Parishes affiliated to the School of Music, Prize of £4; half to be given to the Musical Instructor of the School, and the other half equally divided amongst the competitors; 7. Schools under Government Inspection, in Towns of the United Kingdom, Prize of £4, under the same conditions as No. 6; 8. The Town Banner, Open to Town Choirs of the United Kingdom, to be held for one year by the winning choir, with an Illuminated Certificate, and a silver medal to the Conductor. In the evening a Concert will be given. The Annual Competitive Examination, for pupils of the schools, including the members of the affiliated Choirs, under 17 years of age, will take place early in April, for which occasion thirty-six Prizes are offered.

THE Lindrick House Private Choral Class gave a Concert on the 16th ult., at the Athenæum, Camden Road, in aid of the Organ Fund for the church of St. John the Evangelist, Brownsgate Park. The first part consisted of Mr. J. F. Barnett's "Ancient Mariner," solos by Miss Nelly McEwen, Miss Grace Woodward, Mr. Charles J. Murton, and Mr. William James, supported by the choir, and conducted by Mr. Ernest H. Wadmore, who has trained this class from its commencement. Miss Florence Smart presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Norman Carr at the harmonium. The Cantata was excellently rendered throughout and met with great applause from a crowded audience, the soloists especially having several times to bow their acknowledgments. The composer was present, and at the conclusion expressed his approval, and complimented Mr. Wadmore on his careful training of the choir. The second part consisted of songs rendered by Mr. Van Duren, Miss Grace Woodward, Mr. A. W. Mackenzie, Miss Nelly McEwen, and Mr. Charles J. Murton, all of whom were much applauded, and several encores. In conclusion, Romberg's "Toy Symphony," was performed with much success.

FOUR Subscription Concerts by Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir, under the conductorship of Mr. Alberto Randegger, will be given during the coming season, commencing on the 22nd inst. Two motetts for a double choir—the first, "In Thee, O Lord," by Sir W. Sterndale Bennett, and the second, "Thou wilt content them," by Gounod—will be performed for the first time by this choir, as will also "O Salutaris Hostia," by F. Westlake, and part-songs by Henry Leslie, A. Gaul, A. Caldicott, Ciro Pinsuti, Josiah Booth, and J. G. Callcott. The following artists are already engaged: Miss Mary Davies, Miss Robertson, Miss Santley, Madame Patey, Miss Marian Burton, Miss Fanny Robertson, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. J. Robertson, and Mr. Santley. The repertoire of the choir comprises over 300 works by composers of various periods and nationalities, many of which were written expressly for this association. It is announced that any profit resulting from concerts will be invested and accumulated with a view to establishing a musical scholarship for a vocalist in the name of the choir, and that donations towards this object will be gladly received by the Hon. Sec., Mr. E. A. Willis, 39, Great Marlborough Street. The names of Mr. J. G. Callcott as pianist, and Mr. John C. Ward as organist are a sufficient guarantee that the duties of these offices will be performed with their usual efficiency.

THE Sacred Harmonic Society, now placed under the conductorship of Mr. Charles Hallé, announces four Concerts, at St. James's Hall, at the first of which, on the 23rd inst., M. Gounod's new Oratorio "The Redemption" will be performed; at the second, on April 6, Mendelssohn's "Elijah;" at the third, on April 27, Schubert's Mass in E flat, and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise;" and at the fourth, on May 11, Handel's "Messiah." The following vocalists are already engaged: Miss Anna Williams, Miss Mary Davies, Miss Annie Marriott, Miss Catherine Penna, Miss Edith Santley, Mrs. Suter, Miss Hilda Wilson, Miss M. Hancock, and Madame Patey; Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Henry Guy, Mr. Bridson, Mr. Hilton, Mr. Chaplin Henry, Mr. Burgon, and Mr. Santley. The fact that about four-fifths of the old society's choir have joined the ranks of this society will be a sufficient guarantee that the efficiency of these performances, which earned so high a reputation for the time-honoured parent association, will be fully preserved. The Organist is Mr. Fountain Meen.

WITH the sanction and approval of Sir Frederick A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., and of Professor G. A. Macfarren, Mr. Ridley Prentice is preparing a work which aims at imparting to pianoforte students a knowledge of musical form. It is entitled "The Musician, a Guide for Pianoforte Students: Helps towards the better understanding and enjoyment of beautiful music;" and its plan of combining the study of musical form with the ordinary pianoforte practice, is, we believe, entirely original. To this end analyses are given of a large number of well known pieces. The First Grade, now on the eve of publication by Messrs Swan, Sonnenschein & Co., of Paternoster Row, accompanies the student through a course of study calculated to last from one to two years, the works analysed being extremely easy, and suited for beginners. Five other grades are to follow, of which the second, now complete in MS., is in the printer's hands.

THE third Report of the Birmingham Musical Association shows that the financial condition of the Society is highly satisfactory, although it is stated that, as the expenses at the Town Hall, in consequence of the recent alterations, must be heavier than before, and as it may not be possible in future for the Corporation to continue the free tenancy of the office in the Council House, the Committee cannot guarantee that the present surplus will be maintained. Twenty-seven Concerts have been given during the past season, at which many standard choral works have been performed. An amateur band and chorus has been formed, which will render substantial and efficient aid in the Saturday Evening Concerts of the Association; and as this important new development will, of course, involve some expense, the Committee confidently rely upon a corresponding increase in the subscription list.

THE Belle Sauvage Glee Union gave its third monthly Concert this season at Anderton's Hotel, on the 10th ult., Mr. J. Hamer in the chair. Amongst the part-songs were "By Celia's Arbour," "At Andernach, in Rhineland," "The Happiest Land," and "Comrades in Arms." Mr. G. W. Turner, Mr. W. Martin, Mr. Montgomery, and Mr. S. W. Beckley were very successful in their solos, and Mr. J. Dalgety Henderson elicited well-deserved encores for his artistic rendering of a Serenade by Schubert and "Annie Laurie." Mr. G. F. Bruce played a Saltarelle by Scotson Clark, and accompanied efficiently throughout. The Glee Union also gave a Concert on the 15th ult., with the assistance of Miss Minnie Kirton and Mrs. A. J. Kestin, for the St. Barnabas Literary Society, Holloway. The other soloists were Mr. Flegg, Mr. Syckelmoore, and Mr. S. W. Beckley. Mr. Bruce presided at the pianoforte.

THE marriage of Dr. John F. Bridge, Organist of Westminster Abbey, and Miss Helen Mary Flora Amphlett, eldest daughter of Mr. Edward Amphlett, of Queen's Gate Terrace, was solemnised on the 3rd ult. in Henry VII.'s Chapel, Westminster Abbey. The ceremony was performed by the Dean of Westminster, assisted by the Ven. William Lea, M.A., Archdeacon of Worcester (cousin of the bride), and the Rev. S. Flood Jones, M.A., Precentor. The marriage hymn "Father of Life, confessing, Thy majesty and power" (music by James Turl, words by the Rev. S. Flood Jones) was sung by the choir before the exhortation. For the choral portion of the service Mr. Baillie Hamilton's "Vocalion" was used. As the bridal party retired from the Abbey Dr. Stainer played Mendelssohn's "Wedding March."

ON Friday, the 12th ult., the first Concert by Mr. F. M. Wenborn's vocal and instrumental classes (established in October last) took place in the Islington Chapel Lecture Hall. A selection from the best composers was given by a band and chorus of 120 performers. The solos were chiefly rendered by members of the classes, and gave much satisfaction to the crowded audience. The singing of Madame Lillian Barrett, Miss McDaniel, Mr. De Blaque, and Mr. Pitt was greatly applauded, as was also the playing of Miss Dell, Mr. Bond, and Mr. Wenborn, jun. (pianoforte, clarinet, and harp). The choruses were given with much power and precision, and highly appreciated. Mr. F. M. Wenborn, instructor of the classes, conducted, and the Rev. Robert Berry presided.

ON Christmas Eve, and again on New Year's Eve, a selection of Carols, and also Gounod's "Nazareth," were sung, after evensong, at St. Anne's Church, Hoxton, the solo verses being taken by Mr. E. Puttock, the precentor, and all being excellently rendered. On Christmas Day, at noon, there was a full choral celebration of the Holy Communion, Merbecke's Kyrie and Sanctus being used. The processional hymns were "Come, ye faithful, raise the anthem," and the "Nunc Dimittis," the latter being sung to a single minor chant at the close of the service. The musical arrangements were under the direction of Mr. G. Dixon, the choir-master, who presided at the organ.

THE North-East London Choral Society gave its first Concert of the season at the Morley Hall, Hackney, on December 20. The first part consisted of Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," and a new MS. cantata, "The healing of the Canaanite's daughter," by John E. West, which was highly successful. The second part was miscellaneous, consisting of songs, duets, part-songs, &c., including Barnby's "Silent Night," and John E. West's "The Streams." The solo vocalists were Madame Clara West, Miss Lottie West, Miss Emilie Lloyd, R.A.M., Mr. C. J. Murton, and Mr. C. Prickett; pianist, Mr. W. West; organist, Mr. L. B. Prout.

THE 131st monthly Concert of the Grosvenor Choral Society was given at the Grosvenor Hall on the 19th ult., at which Sir Julius Benedict's "Undine" was performed, the solos being rendered by Miss Josephine Pulham, Miss A. Ronayne, Mr. T. P. Frame and Mr. Henry Baker, Miss Florence Hartley acting as accompanist. A miscellaneous selection followed, consisting of vocal solos, part-songs, and madrigals, and a duet for violin and pianoforte by Mr. C. P. and Miss M. A. Barrow. Mr. G. R. Egerton conducted.

THE Tufnell Park Choral Society gave the first Concert of its eleventh season, on December 19, at the St. George's Church Room, Carleton Road. The works performed were Gade's "Psyche," Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, and Gounod's Carol "Bethlehem." The soloists were Miss Margaret Hoare, Mrs. Grylls, Mr. F. Cox, Mr. F. Partridge, Mr. Grylls, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. Miss Margaret Hoare was especially successful in the somewhat trying music allotted to "Psyche" in Gade's Cantata. The singing of the choir showed no falling off from the standard of excellence attained last season. Mr. F. L. Thomas played the pianoforte accompaniments, and Mr. W. H. Thomas conducted.

A NEW monthly musical periodical called the Lute promises well, if we may judge from the first number, which was published on the 15th ult. An imaginary conversation in Elysium, in which Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Schumann, take part, written by Joseph Bennett, opens the number; and we have also "Reminiscences of Music and Musicians Abroad," by William Beatty-Kingston, an article on the prospects of opera, by H. Sutherland Edwards, and notices of concerts in London and the provinces. A four-part song, by Alfred J. Caldicott, is included in the number.

THE ninth Annual Report of the "Metropolitan Liedertafel," Melbourne, shows that the standard of the Society has been thoroughly maintained, the concerts having been well attended, and the subscription list being full, supplemented, as usual, with a large number of candidates awaiting admission. The financial position of the Association is also highly satisfactory; and although some complaints are made of the non-attendance of members, there is every reason to believe that public interest in the Society is increasing as its sphere of usefulness becomes widened.

THE Erith Choral Society gave a performance of Spohr's "Last Judgment" and Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang," at the Public Hall, on Friday, the 12th ult., under the direction of Mr. Richard Lemaire. The principal vocalists were Madame Worrell, Mr. Harper Kearton and Mr. Kempton. The orchestra was composed of members of the Royal Artillery Band; leader, Mr. Mansfield. Messrs. Sidney Naylor and G. E. Blunden were the accompanists. The performance was highly successful and the audience large.

MRS. BEESLEY (Miss Mattie Spinney) gave a Pupils' Pianoforte Recital at Clapham, on December 28, which was highly successful. The whole of the pieces (chiefly classical) were rendered with much expression and delicacy, several encores being awarded to the young students. The performance was conducted by Mrs. Beesley's brother, the Rev. T. Herbert Spinney, B.A., Oxon., F.C.O., Assist. Chaplain and Organist of Exeter College, Oxford, who also played two solos with much success.

A Service of Praise was sung at Christ Church, Bermondsey, after evensong on Christmas Eve. The selection given comprised Pastoral Symphony "There were shepherds," "Glory to God," and "He shall feed His flock" ("Messiah"), Solo "Sleep my beloved" (Bach), "Praise the Lord" (Elvey), and Mozart's "Gloria" (12th Mass), with a selection of carols. Mr. T. Blake presided at the organ in a very efficient manner, and Mr. Stretton Swann was an able conductor.

MISS AGNES ZIMMERMANN continues to meet with a most favourable reception upon her present prolonged concert-tour in Germany. At Frankfurt-on-the-Maine, where the gifted pianist took part in a recent Concert of the "Museum," her success in a Sonata by Beethoven, and pieces by Jadasohn, Rubinstein, and Mendelssohn, was again complete, the local press referring to her technical attainments and general artistic qualities in terms of the warmest praise.

WE understand that Her Majesty the Queen has acceded to the request of the Committee to become the Patron of the Leeds Triennial Musical Festival, to be held on the 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th of October next.

Acklom, under the patronage of General Lord Wolsey; and on the 13th inst. a Concert will be given by Scandinavian Artists, also under distinguished patronage.

The Battersea Musical Association, under the able direction of Mr. E. Rayner, gave its first Concert this season, at the Town Hall, Wandsworth, on the 12th ult., before a large audience. The vocalists were Miss Witmee, Miss Gertrude Thelenberge, Mr. François E. Choveaux, and Mr. Charles Lockwood; and pianoforte solos were played by Mr. F. E. Choveaux and his pupil, Miss Minnie Pyne. The Concert was in every respect highly successful.

The members of the Ebury Glee Union gave their fourth subscription Smoking Concert on Saturday, the 13th ult., at the Restaurant, Westminster Chambers. The programme contained a good selection of glees and part-songs, which were exceptionally well rendered, several being re-demanded. The soloists were Mr. F. W. Deacon, Mr. A. Roach and Mr. A. J. Ormiston, all of whom were highly successful. A well-executed pianoforte solo was contributed by Mr. George Winny, the accompanist to the Union.

We read the following in the Standard of the 1st ult.: "A correspondent, telegraphing from Tunis, states that John Howard Payne, the author of 'Home, sweet home,' was formerly American Consul at Tunis. He died on the 1st of April, 1852, and was buried there in the Protestant cemetery. His remains were recently exhumed at the request of the United States Government, in the presence of the British authorities, and they will be immediately shipped to America."

The performance of "Elijah" which took place at the Rink Concert Hall, Blackheath, on the 4th ult., was a great success. The choruses were well sung by Mr. Geaussen's choir. Great praise is due to the soloists, Mesdames Thudichum, Jeanie Rosse, Tomalin, and Helen Stark, Messrs. C. W. Fredericks and R. E. Miles; the rendering of the part of the Prophet by the last-named vocalist being especially satisfactory. Mr. Geaussen conducted with his usual ability.

The St. Mark's, (North Audley Street) Choral Society gave its first Concert on Tuesday, the 23rd ult., at George Street, Grosvenor Square. Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm and a miscellaneous selection were efficiently rendered, and much appreciated by a large audience. Mrs. John Bryant, Miss Hubbard, and Mr. James Hassett were the soloists. Mr. Thomas Mountain conducted, and Mr. W. Bolton presided at the piano.

The Free Temperance Entertainments inaugurated by Mr. Thomas Harriot at the Vestry Hall, Chelsea, deserve a word of recognition. We understand that at each concert thousands are unable to gain admission; and as the programmes are uniformly good, every encouragement should be given to an undertaking which we shall be glad to see imitated in other suburbs of the metropolis. The entertainments take place every Saturday evening.

NOTWITHSTANDING the pecuniary losses which have attended the last few seasons of the Denmark Hill Concerts, Mr. Arthur Chappell has determined to give another series at the Institute of Music, Camberwell, commencing on the 22nd inst. We believe that were the existence of these Concerts better known locally, the support would be more commensurate with the eminently excellent character of the programmes.

An Organ Recital was given at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, by Mr. Edwin Evans, F.C.O., on Thursday, the 11th ult. The programme included a Prelude and Fugue (in C) by Bach, a Suite by the performer, and the slow movement and finale from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto: two vocal pieces were contributed by Miss May Moon. These Recitals will in future be given on the first Tuesday and the third Thursday in each month.

REVIEWS.

Trio für Pianoforte, Violine und Violoncell, von Johannes Brahms. Op. 87. [Berlin: Simrock.]

THIS is one of the latest productions from the indefatigable pen of him who now most prominently represents Germany's love of classical art, and has just been published together with a Quintet for strings (Op. 88). It cannot be needful to say that, in common with amateurs everywhere, but especially with those who heard the Trio in St. James's Hall on Monday week, we give the work a hearty welcome. Sublime genius may not—and, indeed, does not—put its mark on everything Brahms writes. The master is sometimes more scholastic than inspired, but, on the other hand he produces no music that fails to command respect. He has an exalted notion of art, and labours up to it conscientiously, avoiding all clap-trap, turning a deaf ear to fantastic ideas, and seeking only to develop music on the lines laid down by the immortal masters from whom he received it. This he does with all the power and success of a man armed with great natural gifts and entitled to the ear of the world, as much by his genius as by the soundness of his judgment.

The Trio before us opens with the usual Allegro (in C major), which itself has the usual "form." This movement is distinctly characteristic of the composer in its thematic material and constructive treatment. The leading theme, for example, which opens with an octave passage for the strings, leaves its tonality for a little while undetermined, and is extended with a rhythmic freedom and vagueness of purpose instantly recognised. A beautiful subject we can hardly declare it to be, but it quickly gives rise to passages wherein the master-hand plainly appears, and it is followed by a second motive in happy contrast. Here the phrasing is symmetrical, and the rhythm regular, while melodic charm lends all possible attraction. We are sorry to leave it for subsidiary matter which, however, carries on the movement with spirit and great skill till the first part ends on the dominant of the original key. Brahms does not repeat this part, nor even mark its conclusion by the ordinary "double bar," preferring to go straight on with his leading theme, now differently harmonised, and quickly made to alternate with treatment of the subsidiary ideas before introduced; while the whole "free fantasia" as much as possible asserts the liberty that is its prerogative. Some of the passages appear to us extremely vague, but we are bound to approve the admirable way in which the instruments are treated. This, too, is characteristic of the composer, who never neglects the individuality of the means he uses in combination. The "working out"—a rather concise one—being ended, the usual repetition takes place with sundry changes, which, however, do not affect the beauty of the ever-welcome second theme. The coda is lengthy, and at the outset not particularly interesting, although its subject is that of the first motive in augmentation. Its closing bars, however, are spirited and effective. The second movement, an Andante con moto in A minor, has the form of an air with variations, the theme being distinctly Hungarian in character. It is most ingeniously treated, even at the outset, where the subject is announced in octaves by the strings, while the pianoforte accompanies with full syncopated chords for both hands. The effect is striking and charming—none the less because of the strange beauty distinguishing the melody. We cannot minutely follow the course of the variations, nor would words alone suffice to give a clear idea of their character and claims. Enough that the interest of the movement is sustained in a manner perfectly legitimate, and without the effort sometimes obvious in the compositions of this master. Whenever the Trio is performed, the Andante con moto will be heard with rapt attention and growing delight. The Scherzo is a Presto in C minor, 6-8, consisting of a principal section, and an alternativo or trio. The first of these divisions has a very simple structural character, being little more than a melody for strings, evolved from one or two plain "figures," and accompanied by the arpeggios of the pianoforte. Nevertheless, the gloominess of the key and the lightness of the passages produce a distinctive effect that cannot fail to make its mark; and, unpretending though it appears, we are inclined to rate this effort very highly, as showing what a master can do with the simplest means. The Trio—Poco meno presto, C major—is more discursive and remarkable for one of Brahms's longest themes. It presents an effective contrast to the leading section of the movement, not only in melodic character, but in its freer harmonic treatment. Like the opening Allegro, the Finale—Allegro giocoso, C major—plunges at once into the principal motive, announced by the unison strings. The subject is broad and well-marked in character, this feature being emphasised by the simple repeated quavers of the pianoforte accompaniment. Brahms goes on to develop this subject in an interesting way, yet with so much simplicity that the least acute listener can follow the thread of the discourse. A modulation to E minor subsequently takes place, and in this key the second subject appears, announced by the pianoforte alone. Here, for the first time in the work, Brahms refuses contrast, employing a theme which might be the offspring of its predecessor, so close is the family resemblance. We are not, however, disposed to complain, for the music, still masterfully simple and clear, flows smoothly on. Moreover, it is soon evident that the composer delayed contrast the better to enhance its effect. The melodious second motive having reached a full close in the dominant key, a new subject appears in that orthodox tonality, the cello leading off with light-some quaver passages to the accompaniment of the pianoforte in quaver triplets. This gives to the movement a new character altogether, which cannot be said to disappear when the pianoforte announces the leading theme in octave triplets of quavers pianissimo, the strings supplying harmony. With this the "free fantasia" begins; but though both the principal subjects are dealt with, the section derives its principal feature from a development of the quaver passages with which the pianoforte accompanied at the beginning. Brahms treats these antiphonal, keys and bows keeping up a dialogue of very short phrases, with no desire on either part for an undue share of talk. How much an episode of this character, when it fairly grows out of the matter propounded, adds to the variety and interest of a movement no amateur needs to be told. Recapitulation duly comes in its proper place, and between it and the coda further treatment, in augmentation, of the leading theme is introduced. The coda itself condenses and, so to speak, sums up both motives in a masterly manner.

The Trio in C major must be regarded, we think, as among Brahms's most successful efforts. It is less profoundly meditative than many works from his pen, and therefore, having regard to the bent of his mind, less involved and obscure. In point of fact, it is frankly musical, and when a master seeks to exercise his art for itself alone the result is generally worth having.

Quintett für zwei Violinen, zwei Bratschen und Violoncell. Von Johannes Brahms. Op. 88.
[Berlin: Simrock].

IN this work we have Brahms's first published Quintet for strings, and around it gathers, therefore, something of particular interest. We shall find that it is not unworthy of attention for its own sake.

The opening movement (Allegro non troppo ma con brio) is in F major, common time, and enters without preamble upon its principal theme, after the fashion so consistently followed in the Trio above noticed. Nothing could be more unpretending than this beginning. The theme, in eight-bar rhythm, shows perfect regularity, and the harmonies are diatonic almost without exception. Power here consists in gentleness and suavity. Not only is attention challenged, but sympathy gained. Some episodic matter, having no reference to the subject, yet seeming appropriately to follow, if not to grow out of it, divides the first motive from the second, which enters—after due preparation for the unusual key—in A major. It is given partly to the second viola, partly to the first, accompanied by detached chords in syncopation. The two violins next take it up in like manner, but to a very different accompaniment, Brahms here indulging in the diversified rhythm he sometimes affects. A codetta at once follows, and strikes us by its ingenuity and beauty. Beginning with a short passage in D major, pianissimo, for first violin, answered in free inverted canon by the cello, a full close in A major is presently reached; and, as the cadence is prolonged, the opening notes of the leading theme steal out from the first viola, the whole coming to a pause on the suddenly introduced dominant harmony of the original key. The first part is then repeated. In the "working out" Brahms begins with his second subject, treating it in the style of a master of polyphony, but with something of the dryness so hard to guard against when the means are purely scholastic. His handling of the first theme has more obvious interest, but it is brief, and presently merges into a grand crescendo, which introduces the reprocession of the themes with all possible magnificence. The coda is quite in keeping with the general spirit of the movement. Lovely in its gentleness and the chaste richness of its harmonies, it brings the Allegro to a close so as to make us wish that the end were not yet.

The Quintet is in three movements only, but the second combines the characteristics of two, seeing that an Allegretto vivace alternates with a Grave ed appassionato, while both, in one instance, give way to a Presto. A more compound movement does not often occur, even in modern music. The Grave leads off in C sharp minor (the first phrase being in the major of the key), and consists of a single theme, brief in itself and briefly treated in a sombre, meditative spirit. Profound melancholy runs through this music, and as its solemn harmonies gradually fade and die in the closing bars, none can resist the contagion. All the greater effect springs from the entrance of the Allegretto vivace, in A major and tripping 6-8 measure; the light-some theme accompanied pizzicato by the lower strings. The exhilarating motion is uniformly sustained in some or other of the parts throughout the section, which ends on the dominant harmony of D, and is then unexpectedly followed by a resumption of the Grave in C sharp minor (with its first phrase again in the major). After this freak it is not surprising to find the slow theme very differently treated, or to discover that the Presto, which soon supervenes, is the Allegretto vivace in common time and otherwise transformed. Brahms's unflinching constructive resources here serve him well, the movement being ingeniously like and unlike that upon which it is a variation. The Presto having run its course, the eccentric movement ends with a return of the Grave, now in A major, and supplemented by a solemn coda. Altogether, this is a curious portion of the work, and we find in our mind a doubt whether much is gained by such a sequence of violent changes in abstract music. They suggest a dramatic significance not to be determined, and prompt a query impossible of satisfaction. The closing Allegro energico (F major, 3-2) begins with a Fugato, the first viola leading off a rapid subject in quavers, inevitably reminiscent of a familiar Quartet by Beethoven. Duly stated and answered in four "voices," a short and somewhat rollicking episode, presenting well-contrasted rhythm, divides it from a section (A major) wherein the fugal theme becomes counterpoint to a subject entirely different in character, its most distinguishing feature being crotchet triplets moving against the quavers of the old subject. This is developed at considerable length with all the independence of parts, and rhythmical diversity, characteristic of Brahms when he is disposed to be learned—and dry. From a contrapuntal standpoint, however, there is much to admire. The coda of the movement is a Presto which, by its overflowing spirit and dashing effect, chases away the impressions made just before, and ends the work well. We doubt whether the Quintet will become as generally popular as the Trio. The first movement pleads strongly in its favour; but the unsatisfactory form of the second, and the laboured character of much of the third are decidedly against its chances. All the same, by such a conscientious and masterly production Brahms lays universal music under an obligation.

Christoph Willibald von Gluck: sein Leben und seine Werke. Von August Reissmann.

[Berlin and Leipzig: J. Guttentag, 1882.]

THE personality and the artistic importance of Christoph Willibald, Ritter von Gluck, the great regenerator of opera in the past century, have as yet been by no means so clearly defined or so exhaustively analysed by the music historian, as to enable us to regard with indifference any fresh attempt, however imperfect, to render justice to either. On the contrary, every earnest student of art-history, and not a few amateurs who have spent an occasional delightful hour in company with the score of one of the master's almost forgotten operas, will eagerly seize upon any publication which may be likely to throw a new light upon the career of this remarkable man. Their anticipation, let it be said at once, will be doomed to at least partial disappointment so long as the able and diligently compiled biography published some twenty-five years ago by the late Anton Schmid is not superseded, or at any rate supplemented by a new work combining an equal amount of painstaking original research with a sympathetic artistic insight into the strivings of the reformer, in which latter quality Schmid's book is undoubtedly deficient. There are difficulties in the way of accomplishing such a task, but they will not prove insurmountable. Of the composer's correspondence—that most valuable aid to the biographer—but little has as yet been discovered. Gluck's fame, moreover, was speedily overshadowed by the dazzling genius of his younger contemporary and successor in the accomplishment of the resuscitation of opera, Mozart, around whose name clustered, even during his brief lifetime, a multitude of more or less well-founded legends and characteristic anecdotes, furnishing a species of material for the story of his life which in the case of his great predecessor is almost entirely absent. Nevertheless, if, as we contend, a comprehensive and sympathetic picture of the whole personality of the reformer has yet to be drawn, we may be sure, in view of the powerful influence of his reforms and the enduring artistic worth of his maturer works, that the task will, sooner or later, be accomplished. The number of competent inquirers and able literary exponents in the field of musical history has been steadily on the increase of late years, and it would be strange indeed if so prominent a figure in the art-world of the past century as the "Ritter" ("Cavaliere," a title conferred upon him by the Pope) von Gluck were not to meet ere long with a literary champion worthy of his noble character and manly genius. Meanwhile, as we have already indicated, we are far from depreciating efforts in the same direction of a less ambitious order, and if their tendency be, as in the case of the present volume from the pen of Dr. Reissmann, to convey us a step nearer towards a perfect appreciation of the master, we have every reason to be grateful to their author.

The prominent feature in the work before us is not so much its biographical value as its general technical merits. As regards the former, Dr. Reissmann has added but little to our previous knowledge of the outward career of the reformer, and for the rest has contented himself with following the existing authorities on the subject, among whom Anton Schmid (erroneously spelt "Schmidt" here in several places), the biographer already alluded to, takes the foremost place. Nor is he always accurate in stating the sources from whence his information is derived. Thus, for instance, in the account rendered of the circumstances of the composer's death, the author is clearly under the impression that he is quoting Schmid's words, whereas the composer in question, although indeed reproduced by the latter, is literally extracted from a much earlier work—viz., J. F. von Mosel's "Life of Salieri" (p. 121). Interesting and valuable in no small degree are, on the other hand, Dr. Reissmann's analyses of Gluck's operas, including some of his earlier ones which have never been published. Interspersed as these analyses are by frequent and apt musical illustrations, the reader is enabled to trace for himself that curious process, the gradual formation of a distinctive style on the part of a great artist—a process specially interesting and instructive in the case of Gluck, whose efforts were so entirely concentrated upon the lyrical drama. In this way we are made acquainted, under the critical guidance of Dr. Reissmann, with the special characteristics and the internal structure, both dramatically and musically, of at any rate all the more important operatic works of the great reformer—surely no slight evidence of the diligent research bestowed by the author upon this section of the volume. The operas alluded to are the following: "La Semiramide Reconnosciuta," "Telemacco, ossia l' Isola di Circe," "La Clemenza di Tito," "L' Innozenza Giustificata"—appertaining to the composer's earlier period, when he was still under the influence of Italian models; "Orfeo ed Euridice," "Alceste," "Paride ed Helena"—showing the gradual maturing of his reformatory ideas; "Iphigénie en Aulide," "Armide," and "Iphigénie en Tauride"—the immortal masterpieces of his fully developed genius. Let the music-loving reader ask himself how many of these operas by the greatest dramatic composer of the past century, excepting Mozart, he can boast of being acquainted with, even by name. In proportion to the nature of his reply will be the interest which he will derive from the perusal of Dr. Reissmann's book. It is curious to note here, by way of parenthesis, that two of the subjects upon which Gluck had bestowed his earlier efforts—viz., "La Clemenza di Tito," already mentioned, and "Don Juan, or the Stony Guest," a ballet—were afterwards immortalised by Mozart. None of the above-enumerated operas have, we believe, ever been produced in this country with the exception of "Orfeo ed Euridice," which was brought out at Covent Garden Theatre during the operatic season of 1860. The composer indeed paid a visit to England in the earlier days of his career—at a period when, according to his biographer, he had just completed eight Italian operas within the space of five years!—on which occasion his "La Caduta de' Giganti," expressly written for the London opera, was produced here in January, 1746, with but little success, and eliciting the well-known remark on the part of Handel that its composer "knew no more counterpoint than his cook." "Artamene," originally written for Cremona, which was likewise produced here two months later, met, however, with a far more favourable reception and was accorded frequent repetitions; six of its airs having been published by Walsh under the title of "The favourite songs in the opera call'd 'Artamene' by Sig. Gluck." It should be remembered, however, that the composer's artistic principles were at that time still in a state of fomentation, while, as his present biographer remarks, the influence of his London experiences, albeit not immediately apparent, may be distinctly traced in some of his later works. Regarding these, and more especially the last three of the above enumeration—viz., "Armide" and the two "Iphigénies"—Dr. Reissmann's critical observations may be summed up in the following sentences: "The importance of Gluck's reform of the opera is judged far too one-sidedly if we merely dwell upon the accuracy of his declamation, the profound psychological truth which he lends to the expression of the words. . . . It is Gluck's far higher merit to have concentrated the lyrical emotion in closest connection with the dramatic action, while still retaining the distinct operatic forms, the mastery over which he had developed during his connection with Italian opera. In the latter, form and emotion rule supreme, and the aria afforded the most complete apparatus for varied emotional expression. It was Gluck who contracted its dimensions, divesting it of all that was not essential, and endowing it with the vigour of his more acute declamatory and emotional accents. Those characteristic progressions by intervals which we meet with in the recitatives more especially of the earlier Italian masters were now interwoven also with the aria, by which means the latter obtained not only dramatic truth, but likewise an intensity of feeling which rivets our attention upon the progress of the drama in a manner previously unknown in opera. Finally, by the interconnection of their individual outbursts of emotion, the persons represented in the opera had gained a distinct character, and the action itself a really dramatic life."

We have already pointed out the direction where, to our thinking, the chief merits of the present volume must be looked for. We should fail, however, in our duty of rendering a just account of the author's work were we to omit to mention his able historical survey of the development of Italian and French opera respectively, to which two chapters are devoted, and which, again, are illustrated by musical examples. In connection with the former, we may quote the masterly characterisation of Handel's operatic style as here given, which will more especially interest our readers. "Like Gluck," our author says, "Handel had gone to Italy in order to make himself more thoroughly acquainted with the true art of dramatic song, which it was then still believed could be found there exclusively. But, at the same time, he had undergone the rigorous, solid training of a German Protestant organist, and was sufficiently familiar with all the requisite means of the severe style—a circumstance which imparted to his operas an artistic value infinitely higher than that to be attained by any other contemporary representative of the Italian style. Whereas these merely learnt to manipulate effectively the given framework of Italian opera, Handel strove to raise it into a superior artistic sphere. His melody yields nothing in charm to that of his co-workers in the same field, and is at the same time most skillfully designed and elaborated, and supported, moreover, by an harmonic under-structure of far greater depth and variety, which is introduced not in the simple and purely materialistic form of a mere accompaniment, but as an independent utterance, frequently assuming a polyphonic character. To him the different instrumental nuances afford not merely the means for producing sensuous charm, but are the powerful adjuncts to a freer characterisation. The form of the aria, too, becomes in his hands established upon a firmer basis, cantilena and fortituras being interwoven in such a way as to appear the natural elements of the entire structure. With Handel, therefore, the Italian operatic style, as previously characterised by us, reached its utmost elaboration; but this was, after all, a matter of only temporary significance. Italian opera, as it then existed, was incapable of further development; its true mission, indeed, it had already fulfilled while in its more simple shape. In order to reform it, it would have been necessary for Handel to pursue the same path which Gluck actually chose afterwards, by foregoing altogether the use of a number of means for musical expression in order to produce the more profound an effect with the remainder. It was, however, not given to Handel to exercise a similar abstinence, and hence he was naturally driven into the opposite direction. Just as Gluck subsequently compressed the entire framework of the Italian opera in order to adapt it most closely to the dramatic exigencies, it was Handel's aim so to expand and at the same time to intensify it as to render a representation on the stage perfectly superfluous." Passages like those just quoted undoubtedly mark their author as a music-historian of no ordinary grasp, and it is the more to be regretted that, in his subsequent narrative, Dr. Reissmann has added so little colouring of his own to the interesting struggle of rival art-principles carried on under the flags of Gluck and Piccini in France. Still more is it to be regretted that he has not even bestowed a passing glance at the kindred reformatory strivings of Richard Wagner with those of his hero, in the same manner as he has done in the parallel drawn between the latter and Bach and Handel, contained in the final chapter of the volume. The silence observed in the former instance may, however, be easily accounted for by a judicious desire to avoid, in a historical work, the field of polemics into which a reference to Wagner would have inevitably led an author whose artistic principles are known to be distinctly at variance with those promulgated by the Bayreuth master. Dr. Reissmann's primary object was to describe "the life and the works" of Gluck; and, although more successful in respect to the latter, his book, as a whole, and in its compact form, undoubtedly supplies a want in the existing literature of the subject. The volume is tastefully printed, and is adorned with a steel engraving presenting the strikingly handsome features of the great reformer to the best advantage.

Christ is risen from the dead. Full Easy Anthem for Easter. Composed by E. A. Sydenham.

[Novello, Ewer, and Co.]

We have not too many new anthems for Easter of a melodious and easy nature, so that the above is doubly welcome, as it is an attractive and effective composition, presenting very few difficulties either for choir or organist. It opens with a short introductory phrase, which is immediately followed by a very melodious movement in 6-8 time. An easy Allegro, to the words "Even so in Christ shall all be made alive," brings the anthem to an effective termination. No great originality is displayed in this composition, but a tuneful and modest spirit pervades the whole.

Reeves's Musical Directory for 1883, with a Calendar. [William Reeves.]

THIS Directory fully maintains its character; but although the editor says in his preface that he has been enabled to use "some of the suggestions" offered for its improvement, we find that the names of those who advertise are still printed in the Trade Directory in larger type than the rest. As we mentioned this in our notice of the issue for last year, therefore, we may conclude that this feature is considered worth preserving.

Six Vocal Sketches. By E. C. Gregory.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE Sketches are unequal in merit, but the composer throughout shows much sympathy with the words she has chosen. The general fault is over-elaboration in the harmonies; and an obvious desire to gain contrast by change of key only seems often to mar the sequence of thought which might arise with less effort. This is especially observable in the song "Growing on a Grave," and also in "Changes," where the restlessness of the tonality, though partially justified by the text, makes the piece appear laboured. No. 1, "Rondel"; No. 2, "The Hollow Oak"—which contains an effective modulation from G minor into the tonic major—and No. 4, "A sunny shaft did I behold," may be commended as good vocal pieces; and musician-like feeling is so decisively evidenced, even in those songs to which we have taken exception, that we shall be glad to welcome Miss Gregory on a future occasion.

Three Rhapsodies for the Pianoforte. By Walter Wesché.

[S. Sprague and Co.]

IT would be indeed difficult to award especial praise to any one of these three Rhapsodies, for they are all excellent both in subject and treatment. No. 1, "Capricieuse," is a charmingly fresh movement, the vague commencement, determined on its repetition by the addition of the C sharp to the chord of the seventh, being a point worthy of much commendation. No. 2, "Romantique," is melodious throughout, and touched with the refinement of an artist who has long dared to think out of the conventional groove. No. 3, "Héroïque," so thoroughly characteristic and spirited as to ensure general acceptance, forms a worthy climax to a group of pieces which require but to be known to be appreciated, both by performers and teachers.

Hymn to Cynthia. A Four-part Song. Poetry by Ben Jonson. Composed by Berthold Tours.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS composition—especially written, like Signor Pinsuti's part-song "Tell me, where is Fancy bred?" (recently noticed), for an amateur performance of "The Merchant of Venice"—is now published, as it was first sung, for male voices, in the "Orpheus" (new series), and also arranged for soprano, alto, tenor, and bass in "Novello's Part-Song Book." In either of these forms it will be equally acceptable; for, apart from its melodiousness and thorough sympathy with the words, it presents no undue difficulties for an ordinarily well-trained choir. As we hear that Signor Pinsuti and Mr. Tours have presented their contributions to the fund for which the dramatic performance was organised, we have a double reason for hoping that both these part-songs will attain the popularity which certainly on their own intrinsic merits they deserve.

A Symphony, the youthful production of Richard Wagner, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its existence in December last at Venice, where the master is spending the winter months, and where it was performed before a private circle as a surprise to his wife, Frau Cosima. In a letter addressed to the editor of the Musikalisches Wochenblatt (a translation of which will be found in our contemporary The Musical Review) the composer gives an interesting account of the work and its history, much curiosity being excited in the musical world to become acquainted with this early production of the Bayreuth reformer.

Dr. Hans von Bülow has, it is stated, resumed his activity as conductor of the Meiningen orchestra, having almost completely recovered from an illness, the serious nature of which has been much exaggerated.

A new opera, "Gudrun," by Herr Klughardt, met with an enthusiastic reception last month at Dessau, where it was produced under the direction of the composer. The work is likewise in course of preparation at the Berlin Opera House. Herr Klughardt, who is a disciple of the "New-German" school, has already become favourably known in Germany by his opera "Iwein" and other compositions, chiefly for orchestra.

The Allgemeine Musikalische Zeitung, the oldest German music journal, founded in 1798 by the firm of Breitkopf und Härtel, of Leipzig, ceased to exist with the end of last year. The journal had been edited for some years past by Herr Chrysander, the well known Handel biographer.

Herr Edward Lassen, the excellent conductor of the Grand Ducal Orchestra, at Weimar, has just celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his activity at that institution. Amongst other distinctions conferred upon him on the occasion, he has been presented with the Doctor's diploma, honoris causa, of the University of Jena.

We read in the Allgemeine Deutsche Musik Zeitung: "One of the curiosities of musical Berlin is the 'Music-Bourse.' Any one requiring the services of musicians, from an entire orchestra down to a pianoforte player, will have his written or personal application immediately attended to here. The Bourse is held daily, between eleven and one, at Domack's Restaurant, where the disciples of Polyhymnia assemble in their hundreds, and where, thanks to the sagacity of mine host, the beer glasses are of the largest to be found in Berlin. This Bourse is, however, a strictly organised institution, having been founded in 1869 by the Berlin Musiker Verein, with proper statutes which are being carried out by a committee of management. The latter distributes the orders as they are received, and sees that the existing normal tariff is adhered to, it being a peculiarity of this tariff that it contains only the minimum charges below which none of the members are permitted to play. On the other hand, whenever there is a brisk demand in the market they may take advantage of it. Thus, playing at a dance is charged for on holy days M.9 for each musician, on Sundays, M.7.50, on week days, M.6 as the minimum; high ministerial and ambassadorial balls are tariffed M.9 each player for four hours, with M.1.50 for each additional hour; rehearsals, M.3, table music, M.5, &c., &c. . . . The Verein commands the best executants, including the orchestral members of all the private theatres of Berlin. It possesses a fund of some M.30,000, and distributes annually from M.600 to M.1,000 among its needy members."

A new tenor, Herr Bötzel, who is said to be gifted with a "phenomenal" voice of exceptionally high range, has just made his début at the Hamburg Opera with brilliant success. Herr Bötzel, who, like his veteran colleague Wachtel, was originally a cab-driver, has been "discovered" by the astute Hamburg impresario, Herr Pollini, who provided the means for his artistic training, and appears to be now in a fair way to reap the reward of his discernment.

Herr Taubert has resigned the conductorship of the Berlin Symphonie-capelle in consequence of failing health. The veteran musician has held the post for a period of forty years.

At a recent concert of the Leipzig Gewandhaus, Rubinstein's colossal "Ocean" Symphony was performed for the first time in its entirety, i.e., with its seven movements, under the direction of Herr Reinecke.

Professor Heinrich Barth, the eminent pianist, has met with a most enthusiastic reception at St. Petersburg, where he has recently given a series of concerts.

The projected Opera Populaire at Paris will, it is stated, receive an annual subvention from the municipal government of 300,000 fr. Among the conditions appended to this grant may be mentioned the following, viz.: that the theatre shall contain at least 2000 seats, three-fourths of which shall be accessible to the public, at the maximum charge of 3 fr. each. Performances of opera to take place every evening, during ten months of the year, and to include at least ten acts of new music annually. The Orchestra to consist of at least 75 musicians, and the chorus of 60 singers, male and female, &c. M. Eugène Ritt is mentioned as the probable director of the undertaking.

M. Gounod's Opera "Le Tribut de Zamora" was announced to be produced, for the first time, at the end of last month at the Imperial Opera of Vienna. M. Massenet's "Hérodiade" is likewise in course of being mounted at the same establishment.

A correspondent writes to us from Lyons: "The Société Saint Cécile, recently formed here for the production chiefly of sacred music, gave its first performance this season on December 17, on a numerically increased scale. The works chosen were 'La Mer,' by Victorien Joncières, and 'Sainte Agnès,' by Madame de Grandval, both composers being present, M. Joncières conducting his own work, while that of the lady composer was entrusted to the able and energetic conductor of the Society, M. Reuschel. The soloists were Mlle. Pouget, of the Lyons Conservatoire; M. Augé, of the Paris Grand Opéra; and a lady member of the Society."

Another correspondent, writing from Hyères (France), says: "Our Philharmonic Society opened its new season on December 15 with a varied programme and an excellent performance. M. Casella, a violoncellist of great reputation, astonished and delighted his hearers in a Concerto by Lalo, and his own Chanson Napolitaine. A no less attraction was the young violinist, Mr. George Corbett, who excited the admiration of the audience by his rendering of Wilhelm's Paraphrase on a Romance by Chopin, and of two Spanish dances by Sarasate. Mr. Corbett has pursued his studies in Germany."

The baritone Lasalle, of the Paris Grand Opéra, has accepted an engagement for a season at St. Petersburg at a salary of 50,000 francs.

A monument is to be erected to Méhul in his native town, Givet.

Massenet's opera "Hérodiade," which has been received with so much favour at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, of Brussels, was announced to be performed on the 20th ult. at the Hamburg Stadt-Theatre, this being the first production of the work in Germany.

An interesting and successful revival of Boieldieu's operetta, "La Fête au village voisin," took place recently at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, of Brussels.

The valuable collection of violins and violin bows of the late Henri Vieuxtemps has been purchased by the Duke of Campo-Medina for the sum of 50,000 francs.

In consequence, it is said, of the low standard maintained by its operatic performances, the municipal authorities of Rome have withdrawn their subvention of 170,000 francs from the Apollo Theatre, which, accordingly, has been obliged to close its doors.

The death is announced, on the 24th ult., of Friedrich von Flotow, the composer of "Martha" and numerous other less popular operas, at the age of seventy, he having been born on April 27th, 1812, at Rentdorf, in Mecklenburg, Germany. A detailed notice appears in another column.

BARBADOS.—On Christmas Day the choir of St. Leonard's Church presented the Organist, Mr. M. E. Doory, with an address, on the occasion of his resignation of the post, which was most honourably failed, and accompanied this flattering testimonial of esteem by the present of a handsome pair of vases.

The entire performance was an unqualified success.—A Concert was given in the new Public Hall, Sedgley, on Tuesday, the 16th ult., when Nichol's Oratorio Babylon was performed with a band and chorus of upwards of 100 performers. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Church, Mrs. Richards, Mr. H. T. Bywater and Mr. Bingley Shaw, the two latter being particularly successful in their solos. Mr. J. Hale was leader of the band, and Mr. J. Wones accompanied. Mr. J. M. Dewar was an able Conductor. The hall was crowded in every part.

DURHAM.—A Sacred Cantata, Nativity, arranged and partly composed by Mr. C. Vard, and selections from Samson, Messiah and Elijah, were given at Bethel Chapel, North Road, on the 10th ult. The voices were accompanied by a string band and the organ. The Cantata was very creditably performed, the choruses being rendered with artistic finish. The solos and quartets were taken by Misses Spedding and Oates, Mr. Shadforth, and Mr. Dixon. "Honour and arms" (Handel) and "Thus saith the Lord" were well sung by Mr. T. Ainsley, who also conducted. Mr. Phillips was highly successful in his rendering of "He was despised" and "O rest in the Lord" both singers being endorsed. Mr. F. W. Smallwood, pupil of Dr. Armes, presided at the organ.

EDINBURGH.—There was a crowded audience at Sir Herbert Oakley's Organ Recital on the afternoon of the 17th ult. The well-selected programme gave the utmost satisfaction, two of the pieces being enthusiastically encored.—The first of what is intended to be a series of annual Concerts by students, in aid of the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary, took place, on the 11th ult., in Queen Street Hall, and was exceedingly successful from a musical point of view. The attendance was fully the programme announced, no less than the object which the Concert was held to promote, should have attracted a larger audience; and it is to be hoped that the success of the Concert on this occasion will ensure a better state of matters next year. The students had the vocal assistance of Miss Middleton and Miss Annie Grey, both of whom were highly efficient; and some effective instrumental solos were also contributed. There was a fairly good orchestra, conducted by Mr. Sinclair.

EDMONTON.—On Thursday, the 4th ult., a numerously attended Conversation was held in the Congregational Schoolrooms, Upper Fore Street. The vocalists were Miss Petrie, the Misses Walter, Miss Hobbs, Mr. George Coventry, Mr. W. Hobbs and Mr. Denham. Miss Friedel presided at the piano, and violin solos were given by Mr. Turier and Mr. Hardwick. The choir performed several part-songs, under the direction of Mr. Crossley.

ENNISKILLEN.—At the Parish Church on Christmas Day the services were fully choral, Barby's Tallis (ferial use) being sung. The Venite was given to Beckwith in D, the proper Psalms to chants by Jackson in D and Mather in G; the service was Dr. John Clarke (Venite), E. and the Kyrie Nones in D. The Anthem during the day included "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel" (Dr. Wesley) and "O Thou that tellest," from Handel's Messiah, the solo in which was well rendered by Master Charles Haydn Arnold. Mr. Matthew Arnold presided at the organ.

FARNWORTH.—On Wednesday evening, December 27, the Amateur Choral Society gave its first open meeting of the season in the Parish Church Schools. The programme included A Song of Victory (Ferdinand Hiller), with several part-songs and vocal solos. The Society was assisted by Mr. Kimball, of the Manchester Cathedral choir. All the items were most satisfactorily rendered, especial marks of approbation being accorded for the somewhat exacting Song of Victory and "Fire, fire!" (Morley), the latter unaccompanied. The audience was large and appreciative, and the Rev. J. A. Winstanley displayed much tact and skill as Conductor. Mr. Alfred Moorhouse ably accompanied the choir, and, in addition, played two original compositions for the piano with much success.

FROME.—Mr. W. Haydn Cox, Organist of Clifton Parish Church, gave a very successful Concert at the Mechanics' Hall on the 16th ult., assisted by Miss Phillips, of the Paris Conservatoire (whose admirable rendering of Gounod's song "There is a green hill," and two other solos, gave great satisfaction), Mr. A. Collard (Rute), Mr. W. E. Cox (violin), and Miss Laura Cox (Piano). The Concert-giver played Chopin's Ballade in A flat on the pianoforte, and also obtained an encore for a solo on the "Harpe Éolienne" Concert Organ. The following amateurs gave their assistance:—Vocalists: Messrs. H. Morgan, E. R. Trotman, and Julia; and instrumentalists: Messrs. P. W. Crutwell (horn), and W. Harrold (double bass).

GALWAY.—The members of the Choral Union gave their first Concert on Thursday evening, December 21, under the direction of Mr. T. H. Crowe, Organist of St. Nicholas' Cathedral. The programme consisted of popular pieces, well rendered by local amateurs and Mr. A. Bailey, of Dublin. Mr. Crowe's pianoforte solos were a feature of the evening.

GREENFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS.—Special religious ceremonies have been held in St. James's Church in memory of Henry Wilson, who for twenty-two years was the respected and beloved Organist of the Church. In the chancel had been erected a memorial to Mr. Wilson, in the shape of an altar, or, perhaps it might more properly be called, a reredos, of exquisite design and proportions. It was the suggestion of Mr. Melville Copeland, of Middletown, and was paid for chiefly by Hartford subscriptions. The design, like the execution of the carvings, is exquisitely fine, and in every respect admirable. The central altar panel presents a three-fold face, on a ground of clear, deep blue, bordered with delicate arabesques, and bears a medallion, rimmed with gold, showing the monogram I.H.S. in gold, and surmounted with a rayed golden crown. Below the symbolical Christian monogram is the inscription, on the central division: "To the glory of God, and in loving memory of Henry Wilson, a committed and former Organist of this church. Died January 8, 1878." It is supported on either side by Corinthian columns, in clusters. A Gothic gable completes this part of the design, its carved roses and emblematic circular Greek cross being notably beautiful and appropriate. The panels on either side are on bases showing the Greek Alpha and Omega, and are made to correspond, in their general character, with the central piece. They are rendered especially noticeable and attractive by being set in golden ground. On the right-hand wall is a mural tablet in memory of Dr. Strong, the Rector when Mr. Wilson was the Organist of St. James; and on the left a fine crayon portrait of Mr. Wilson, decorated with smilax and wreaths of roses and laurel. The musical part of the service was under the direction of Mr. Camp, the Organist, and the vocal parts were rendered by Mrs. Rogers, Miss Keeney, Miss Elliott, Miss Brooks, Messrs. Gundlach and Wender.

GREENOCK.—The members of the Choral Union gave a miscellaneous Concert, in the Town Hall, Tuesday, December 26. The soloists were Miss E. Eborall, Miss L. Lambert, Mr. E. Batty, and member of the society. The part-songs and choruses were well sung. Mr. D. Middleton conducted.

HANLEY.—The Philharmonic Society gave a performance of The Messiah on the 19th ult., in the Imperial Circus, before a large and appreciative audience. The choir, numbering 30 performers, sang admirably, and an efficient band, led by Mr. F. Ward, rendered good service. The principal vocalists were Madame Marie Rose, Miss Orridge, Mr. A. Kenningham and Mr. A. McCall. Mr. F. Mountford conducted.

HULL.—A Concert, under the auspices of Mr. Holder, was given at the Artillery Barracks on the 17th ult., where a well-arranged programme was performed by Mr. De Jong's band, an interesting item being Coven's Suite de Ballet, The Language of the Flowers. Mr. De Jong's flute solos were highly appreciated. Mr. Herbert Reeves was the vocalist.

HULME.—Mons. Coutélier still continues his Recitals, Mr. J. Greaves having introduced several good compositions during the month, the appearance of a clever young violinist—Master D. M. Greaves—being also a feature in the Concerts.—An Organ Recital was recently given at Mr. Richardson's Central Organ Works, by James Eccles, of Farnworth, on the large organ for the Congregational Church, Farnworth, Lancashire.

KENMORE, N.B.—The Annual Concert of the Choral Union took place at the Mans of Kenmore on Thursday, December 28. The programme was carefully selected and well rendered. The chief feature of the evening was Lady Breadalbane's singing of Behrend's "Clear and cool" and Moncrieff's "My heart is like a singing bird" which were warmly applauded. Miss Dunn acted as accompanist, and Mr. George H. Wormington conducted.

LEAMINGTON.—The members of the Musical Society gave a good performance of The Messiah on Tuesday, December 26. The solo vocalists were Miss Holcroft Jefferison, R.A.M., Miss Hilda Bolton, R.A.M., Mr. J. Mason and Mr. W. H. Ward. The band and chorus numbered 150 performers. Mr. Frank Spinney, F.C.O., conducted. The Musical Society announces for the year 1883 a Miscellaneous Concert in May, an Orchestral Concert in the autumn, and Elijah at Christmas.

LEEDS.—The second annual Entertainment in aid of the funds of the Leeds Jewish Free School was given in the Assembly Rooms, New Brigate, on the 10th ult. After the performance of a comedy by Mr. F. W. Broughton, a Concert took place, in which Mr. Fabstein achieved a decided success, by the rendering of a song by Mr. W. Booth, a local composer; Miss Harris and Mr. R. J. Westley also contributing vocal solos, which were much applauded. Mr. G. R. Wainman was an able accompanist.—Not less than 1,200 or 1,500 persons assembled in the Victoria Hall on the 13th ult. to hear Dr. Spark's musical tribute to the memory of M. Gambetta. The programme contained the Funeral March from the Normans by M. W. H. Ward, the March of the "Requiem" of Mozart; a new Funeral March in F minor and major, from the album of Xaver Schwarwka (Op. 43), the distinguished Prussian pianist; the Dead March from Saul; and a Funeral March by Mendelssohn. The company joined in singing the hymn "Brief life is here our portion," and after the air "Angels ever bright and fair" (which was encored), "Rule, Britannia," "La Marseillaise," and the National Anthem were given.

LEWES.—The services on Christmas Eve at St. Anne's Church were fully choral, and attended by large congregations. A special feature of the Evensong was the Choral Service, which took the place of a sermon, the solo parts in the carols being admirably rendered by Masters Frank Steadman and Frank Vine. On Christmas Day the musical service was also of the highest interest.

LEICESTER.—The Amateur Harmonic Society gave a performance of Farmer's Oratorio Christ and His Soldiers in the Temperance Hall on the 15th ult. The solos were well sung by Miss D. Bawell, Mr. Kirby, and Mr. J. McRobert. The choruses were rendered with much effect. The solos were accompanied by Miss E. Hodgkins on the pianoforte, and the choruses by Mr. J. W. Bunney on the organ. Mr. D. J. Blackburn conducted.

LEVENSHAM.—The Wensleydale Musical Society gave a very creditable performance of Handel's Messiah in the Town Hall on the 12th ult. The solo vocalists were Madame Shepherd, Mrs. A. Broughton, Mr. D. S. Macdonald, and Mr. A. McCall. The orchestra was led by Mr. E. A. Haddock, the Hon. L. Powlett presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. W. Leggett conducted.

MANCHESTER.—On the 13th ult. Berlioz' Faust was performed at Mr. Hallé's Concert before a large audience. The soloists were Miss Davies, Messrs. Lloyd, Santley and Hilton.—At Mr. Cross's Central Populæ Concert, at the Association Hall, on the 13th ult., the attraction consisted in a competition of choirs, a prize of £7 being offered to that which the audience, by vote, adjudged the best. The competing choirs were the Alexandra Quartet Party, Hulme; the Cymric Vocal Union, Liverpool, thirty voices; the Orpheus Glee Club, Rochdale, sixteen voices; the Orpheus Quartet Party, Huddersfield; the St. Stephen's Glee Club, Salford, thirty voices; Victoria Glee Club, Burnley, thirty voices; Victoria Glee Club, Chorlton-on-Medlock, twenty voices. The prize was awarded to the Rochdale Glee Club (Mr. John Towers, of Manchester, Conductor) by 467 votes, the Huddersfield Club coming second, with 200 votes.

NEWNHAM-ON-SEVERN.—Miss Mary Morgan gave a Benefit Concert at the Town Hall, on Thursday evening, December 28, when she was assisted by Miss Gertrude Lewis, R.A.M., Miss Hilda Wilson (Gold Medalist, R.A.M.), Mr. John Hunt, of Gloucester, and several amateur friends, including Captain A. S. Griffiths, Captain Frowde, Mr. F. West (London), Mr. Lyon Bowley and Mr. Hubert Morse. The hall was crowded, and the Concert was a great success.

NEWTON ABBOT.—The Society gave its first annual Concert on Tuesday the 2nd ult. before a large audience, and achieved a well deserved success. The main feature of the programme was Mozart's Twelfth Mass. The vocalists were Miss Kate Spary, Miss Marie Gane, Messrs. E. T. Morgan, and J. F. Nash, who were most efficient in their respective solos. The second part of the programme was secular, commencing with a movement from one of Haydn's Symphonies, which was executed with great spirit and delicacy by the band. The principal vocalists contributed songs, which were well received. The Mass was rendered by a numerous and well-trained chorus, under the able and judicious direction of Mr. E. Bown, and an enlarged orchestra, with Mr. M. G. Rice as leader.

NORTH BERWICK, N.B.—The usual Christmas Services were held at St. James's Church. At the special Evening Service the anthem consisted of a Christmas Cantata, illustrative of the birth of Christ, in which a quartet and two solos were well sung by members of the choir. At the full choral matins on Christmas Day the Te Deum was sung in F, and the anthem "Behold, I bring you" (C. W. Smith). The newly appointed Organist and Choirmaster (Mr. T. S. Guyer) presided at the organ.

OLDHAM.—Miss Riley's Concert party visited the Co-operative Hall on the 23rd ult., Mr. Clifton officiating as accompanist.

OTTAWA.—The Concert of the Philharmonic Society, at the Grand Opera House, on the 12th December, was in every respect highly successful. The choruses in St. Cecilia's Day, the work selected for the occasion, were admirably sung, and the solos were also efficiently rendered by Miss Denzal and Miss Kemp. The second part was misdirected, and contained several vocal solos, which elicited much applause. Special praise must be awarded to Mr. Oliver King, who was most enthusiastically encored after his fine performance of Chopin's Polonaise in E flat. The valuable services of Mr. Harrison as conductor and of Mrs. Harrison as accompanist also deserve acknowledgment.

OXFORD.—Handel's Oratorio The Messiah was given by the Musical Society in the Town Hall on the 11th ult. This Society was started with the object of providing performances of Oratorio music at a low rate of admission, the prices being three shillings and two shillings, and one shilling a seat. As the attendances have proved the existence of a want which the members may congratulate themselves upon having supplied. The performers on this occasion consisted of about 300; the band, which was a full one, being led by Mr. J. G. Slapoffski with considerable ability. Mr. R. Horsley conducted the Oratorio; and great credit is due to him for the admirable manner in which he has trained the choir. The principal vocalists were Messrs. Fraser Brunner, Miss Eliza Thomas, Mr. L. E. Fryer, and Mr. Charles Bonell, all of whom were thoroughly efficient.

PONTEFRAC.—On Friday evening, the 10th ult., the members of the Choral Society—Conductor, Mr. Young of Wakefield, and accompanist, Mr. Gledhill—gave a Concert in the new Town Hall, before a large audience. The first part of the programme consisted of H. Smart's Cantata, The Bride of Dunkerron, the characters of the Sea Maiden, Dunkerron, and the Sea King being taken by Miss Nellie Moxon, the Rev. T. W. Stephenson and Dr. Schofield. The second part comprised glees by the Society, and songs, duets, &c., by the individual members.

SALISBURY.—A Concert was given by the Voluntary Choir of St. Thomas's Church, in the Schoolroom, on the 22nd ult., and was in every respect successful. The choir sang the part-songs "All is still" (Macfarren), "What bells are those?" (Richards), and "Sweet and low" (Barbry) with good effect. The band contributed the Overtures "Sij'tain roi" and "Italiana," Mignon Gavotte, &c.; and songs were sung by members of the choir and by ladies in the parish. The proceeds were given to the Church Restoration Fund. Mr. Augustus Aylward, the Organist of the Church, conducted.

SEVENOAKS.—The first Concert of the St. John's Choral Society, whose formation dates only from October last, took place at the St. John's Room, on Wednesday, the 18th ult., with much success. The very satisfactory result of this performance is fairly acknowledged to be due to the careful and conscientious instruction given by the popular Musical Director, Mr. G. E. Blunden, Organist and Choir-master of St. Mary's Church, Brookfield, Highgate, and formerly of Sevenoaks Parish Church. The choir now numbers seventy-seven voices.

SHIFNAL.—Mr. J. Marsh, on his retirement from the duties of Organist and Choirmaster at the Parish Church, was presented by Mr. J. E. Chesdale, a member of the choir, with a handsome silver watch and chain to mark, as a token of esteem and appreciation of his general urbanity and musical ability. Mr. Marsh had held this office only three months.

SPILSBY.—Miss Rose, assisted by friends, gave a Concert on December 27, and another on December 28, at St. James's School, both of which were highly successful. At the first, Aspa's Cantata The Gipsies, and at the second, Rogers's Comic Cantata, Jack and the Beanstalk, were well rendered, the second part of the programmes being miscellaneous.

STEYNING.—A meeting was held at the National Schoolroom on the evening of the 15th ult., to take into consideration the desirability of forming a Choral Society for Steyning. Mr. W. P. Breach, one of the churchwardens, was voted to the chair. In opening the meeting he spoke in high terms of the way in which Mr. H. Rowell, the Organist of the Church, had improved the service, and he was aware that under his (Mr. Rowell's) superintendence they could get together as good a society as could be found in the country. He called attention to the fact that the subscription was only five shillings for the season. This amount was paid at once by all present.

STOKE-BY-NAYLAND.—A Concert in aid of the fund for the enlargement of Leavenheth Church was given in the Schoolroom on the 15th ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Baker, Miss Sanders, Mrs. Brewster, Miss Farr, Miss K. Lingham, the Rev. G. Langley, Mr. Mortimer, Mr. Worters and Mr. Hogger. Instrumental solos were also contributed with much success by Herr Waldau (violin) and Mr. Mortimer (flute and piccolo). There was a large and highly appreciative audience.

STOWMARKET.—A Concert was given by the members of the Musical Society in the Institute Hall on the 9th ult. The programme included several songs by the Conductor, Mr. E. A. Sydenham, which were warmly applauded. The soloists were Miss Gould, Mr. Haines and Mr. Frederick Pattle (vocalists), Mrs. Henry (piano) and Dr. Henry (violin).

TENBY.—Handel's Oratorio Judas Macabæus was very successfully performed by the Musical Society on December 28, under the direction of Mr. W. Terence Jenkins, Organist of the Parish Church. The solos were well rendered by the following artists: Madame Clara Suter, Miss Emily Dones, Mr. Chas. Fredericks, and Mr. Daniel Harrison. The Society had the assistance of an orchestra, which was highly appreciated, as this was the first time an Oratorio had been given in Tenby with full force. On the 10th ult. Mr. T. Lamb (Organist of the church) conducted. The building was well filled with an appreciative audience.

THIRSK.—A very successful Concert was given on December 27, when a miscellaneous programme was excellently rendered. The artists were Mrs. Charles Clark, Miss Marie Rigg, Mr. Thompson and Mr. Cass. Miss Porter presided at the piano, and accompanied very judiciously.

The soloists were Miss James, Mrs. Huchson, Mr. Alfred Kenningham, Mr. R. de Lacy, and Mr. Elkins. Mr. Wildsmith presided at the organ. Mr. Parnall led the band, and Mr. Lamb (Organist of the church) conducted. The building was well filled with an appreciative audience.

WELLINGTON, SOMERSET.—Mr. Tom's Concert, on the 12th ult., at the Masonic Hall, was as successful as any of those he has annually given, a well-arranged programme being excellently rendered throughout. The vocalists were Madame Osborne Williams, Mr. Dyved Lewis, and Mr. Arthur Grimshaw, the concert-giver being ably assisted in the instrumental department by two of his sons, Mr. E. J. K. Tom's (piano and violoncello) and Mr. W. J. K. Tom's (violin). Mr. Tom's harmonium solo, "Reminiscences of Scotland" and the pianoforte and violin solos of his sons were conspicuous features in the selection.

WEST HARTLEPOOL.—The Philharmonic Society's Concert on December 28 was a very great success in every respect. Van Dyck's St. Cecilia's Day was performed with full band and chorus, the solo parts being well rendered by Madame Laura Smart. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, the principal performers being Madame Smart, Mr. J. Thompson, Mr. Warner (concertina), Mr. Hodgson (violin), Mr. Stephenson (organ), and Miss F. Kitching (pianoforte). Mr. J. H. Lewis, F.G.S., conducted.

The vocalists were Mrs. Charles Clark, Miss Lily Parratt, Mr. T. Budd, and Mr. J. Nutton, who were most successful. The choruses were excellently rendered. There was a large audience.

WIMBLEDON.—The Musical Society gave its ninth Concert on the 17th ult. in the Drill Hall. The programme comprised Mendelssohn's Athalie (which was admirably performed, the solos being rendered with much effect by Miss Alice Parry, Miss Whitehead, and Mrs. Dean), Beethoven's Prometheus Overture, Schubert's Rosamunde music, a new March (Masonic), by Boucher, which created a marked impression; and a miscellaneous selection.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA.—The first Concert of the Oratorio Society was given on December 11 at Wesley Hall, when Haydn's Creation was performed before a large and appreciative audience. The principal vocalists—Mrs. Whitehead, Miss Millie Reed, Messrs. J. W. Jowett, G. H. Holland, W. A. Peters, and F. W. Barrett—were thoroughly efficient, and the chorus singing excellent throughout. The inventor and patentee kindly requests members of the musical profession and trade to apply to him for drawings, full and explicit explanations, also prices of this the only Patent Action for attaching organ pedals to a pianoforte, also prices of organ pedals, which are charged cost price only.

IMPROVED ORGAN PEDALS & ACTION
FOR PIANOFORTES.

J. HAMILTON,

FIRST INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER.

TESTIMONIAL.

Sir,—I received the pedals and action yesterday, and have got it attached to my pianoforte. I must say that its utility and usefulness exceed all my expectations; it is perfectly noiseless, and just what every organist or any one wishing for pedal practice at home ought to have. I should have had a set of your pedals years ago had I known they acted so well.—I remain, yours most truly,

To Mr. J. Hamilton.

J. AINSWORTH, Prof. Music.

The Orchestra and Choir for May says: "We have had an opportunity of testing the efficiency of the Pedals for Pianofortes supplied by Mr. Hamilton, of Bristol. Their finish could not be better, and the simplicity and noiselessness of the Action is a great thing in their favour, as well as the ease with which they can be attached, and the fact that they do not injure the instrument in any way."

The Action is easily attached to any kind of Pianoforte in a short time.

A Set of Straight Pedals and Action (30 notes), price £4 4s.

A Set of Radiating and Concave Pedals and Action (30 notes), price £5 5s.

A Set of Straight and Concave Pedals, as recommended at the Organ Conference, 1881, and Action, price £5 5s.

Full printed instructions, "How to Attach," are sent with each set. Liberal discount to the Trade and Profession. Agent—Mr. Arthur F. Adcock, 4, Gladstone Terrace, Bolan Street, Battersea Bridge Road, S.W. Send for testimonials and terms to

AN ODE FOR MUSIC

BY

WILLIAM COLLINS

SET TO MUSIC FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA BY

ALICE MARY SMITH

(Mrs. MEADOWS WHITE).

Octavo, paper cover, 2s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"Firmness, vigour, and strength mark the treatment of conceptions which are massive rather than graceful and elegant. . . I welcome Mrs. Meadows White's 'Ode to the Passions' as the production of undeniable talent, and a worthy addition to the musical things which, being English, give Englishmen cause for pride."

DAILY NEWS.

"The Cantata displays much musical taste and intelligence, with a considerable aptitude for the use of orchestral combinations, and the work will certainly not diminish the artistic reputation gained by Mrs. Meadows White's previous compositions."

STANDARD.

"Mrs. White's work is honest, straightforward, and legitimate in every acceptance of the term; she aims at producing no sensational effects, but achieves that which is infinitely better—a work which will grow upon the auditor and student alike as a pleasing and highly finished art-product."

ATHENÆUM.

"A work of great merit, and quite worthy of its position in a festival programme. It should prove an exceedingly useful addition to the répertoire of Choral Societies."

SUNDAY TIMES.

"Possesses merit of no ordinary calibre. It is a well-conceived and powerful setting of Collins's poem."

THE HOLY CITY

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"The work is an honour to English Art, and has elevated its composer into a place of distinction amongst native musicians."—Queen.

"A good sound musical work this is 'Holy City.' I have no hesitation in saying that it creditably represents English art, and does honour not only to the skill but to the judgment and taste of Mr. Gaul." Daily Telegraph.

"The reception was favourable in the extreme, and the Cantata must henceforth be classed among the successes which the Birmingham Musical Festivals have brought to light."—Standard.

"The Holy City" is evidently the work of a thoughtful as well as a clever composer, and should make its mark among thoroughly English productions of a sacred character."—Musical Times.

"We hope and believe that the reception given last night to Mr. Gaul and to his 'Holy City' Cantata will prove an earnest of its popularity and acceptance throughout the length and breadth of the land."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"A most interesting, tuneful, and scholarly work."—Manchester Courier.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

This Part-Song, written for, and dedicated to, the Kyrie Society, is laid out in Mr. Gaul's very best manner, and while recalling, for its beautiful effects, his elegant Part-Song, "The silent land," the resemblance begins and ends there. Mr. Gaul knows to the very letter the capabilities of the voices he writes for, and one is perfectly safe, even after a single experience only, in predicting a widespread popularity to

THE SHUNAMMITE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR SOLI VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

GEORGE GARRETT

Octavo, paper cover, 3s.

Chorus Parts, 2s. 8d.; String Parts, 14s.; Full Score, and Wind Parts, Manuscript.

STANDARD.

"Happier in his choruses than his solo numbers, Dr. Garrett exhibits a lively appreciation of the school which confesses allegiance to Mendelssohn, and has nothing whatever to do with the hideous cacophony which modern Germans would persuade us to receive as absolute music. Nothing particularly new is taught us in 'The Shunammite,' but every effect gained is reached by legitimate means; the choruses are bright and telling, and if the solos are of diminished interest, it only instances the difficulty of writing arias in the devotional style—a difficulty experienced by even greater musicians than Dr. Garrett. . . I fancy that 'The Shunammite' ought to become popular with choral societies, because it is distinctly interesting, and calls for nothing beyond ordinary means of exposition. There is one chorus in particular, 'Call for the mourning women,' that is enough to prove that the author is a man of more than ordinary mind and faculty."

MORNING POST.

"The choruses, written with the skill and feeling of a well-trained musician, were admirably delivered. The recitatives are thoughtfully laid out, and the song for the Shunammite, 'My soul shall be joyful,' sung by Miss Williams, is most effective. 'I cried unto the Lord' is also good, though perhaps it is a little too long in the position it occupies. The writing in the scene descriptive of the mourning for the Shunammite's child is among the best and most original efforts of the kind given to the public for a long time, and may be taken as a proof that Dr. Garrett possesses powers which ought to be exercised again in like efforts. . . The merits of the Cantata are many, and will appeal most successfully to those who are content with the most expressive of a series of musical ideas represented with all respect for the laws of form and order. There is no unhealthy striving after the impossible and the undesirable; all is legitimate and musically. It will find a welcome reception in many quarters, and tend to augment the estimation in which the composer is held."

DAILY CHRONICLE.

"Dr. Garrett may rest satisfied that it does not detract from the high reputation he has acquired as a composer of church music and of slighter choral pieces. The conditions of rendering a new composition in a cathedral prevent outspoken expressions of public favour or of disapprobation; but, during the hour and a half it occupied this morning, it completely held the attention of the assemblage. Dr. Garrett conducted, and he must have felt that his work was presented under favourable auspices."

GUARDIAN.

"The scene of the sickness and death of the child and the mourning over it is altogether admirable; it is thoroughly original, full of genuine emotion, and deeply impressive. If Dr. Garrett had not shown by this fine piece of writing what he can do, it is probable he would have escaped much of the severe criticism which so many have passed upon the Mendelssohnian character of the other portions of the work. In short, if he will write his next cantata entirely in the 'Garrett' style, he will achieve a success without reservation. But the cantata contains admirable vocal writing, and is well scored; and it is also so enriched with pleasing melody, and smooth, skilfully handled modulations, that it is a valuable addition to works of its class. Dr. Garrett conducted with firmness and judgment, and received manifold congratulations on the success of the cantata."

ATHENÆUM.

"Dr. Garrett's Cantata is the work of an excellent church musician who has written some irreproachable services and anthems. . . Naturally, Dr. Garrett's musicianship is displayed to most advantage in the choruses, of which the best are 'Children are an heritage,' and the concluding number of the first part, 'The voice of joy,' the former being noteworthy for some clever contrapuntal writing."

ACADEMY.

"The composer writes thoroughly well and has studied good models. The choruses 'Be not forgetful,' 'Sing we praise to our Creator,' and 'Death is come up,' seem to us most deserving of mention."

ERA.

"We may at once state that Dr. Garrett does not, like so many of our recent composers, sacrifice everything for the sake of a questionable originality. It is seen from the first that the composer aims not so much at dramatic as narrative effects. . . The chorus 'Sing we praise to our Creator,' is one of the happiest efforts of the composer. It is well and effectively written, with fluent melody and rich though comparatively simple harmony. . . Dr. Garrett may be satisfied with having done, if not a great, at least a good thing. There are evidences throughout his cantata, that, with a theme more suited to his special gifts he would have reached a still higher standard."

PSYCHE

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

(The Words from the Danish of LOBEDANZ)

COMPOSED BY

NIELS W. GADE

Octavo, paper cover 2s. 6d.

" paper boards 3s. 0d.

" scarlet cloth 4s. 0d.

Full Orchestral Score, £1 10s. net.

TIMES.

"The music of Herr Gade is in perfect keeping with its subject. It is graceful and melodious rather than powerful, and the lyrical portions gain prominence over the tragic motives of the story, which other masters might have emphasised. The music assigned to the heroine, more especially, is marked by a freshness and fluency of conception, which show that the youthful innocence of 'Psyche' most immediately appeals to the composer. . . Herr Gade's music will be appreciated wherever refinement and grace combined with sound scholarship are valued."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"Its music from first to last was intelligible, and charged with the grace and beauty of the school that, having had Herr Gade as a pupil, now claims him as a professor. . . From beginning to end we are conscious of that happy union of the classic and the romantic which Mendelssohn and Schumann, each in his degree and manner, so conspicuously illustrate. . . I cordially endorse the enthusiastic verdict of the Birmingham audience, for, though Herr Gade's Cantata does not achieve the oft-times questionable feat of marking 'a new departure,' it is a thing of beauty that should live long to be a joy."

DAILY NEWS.

"The vocal and orchestral combinations in this (the closing) scene, as indeed throughout the Cantata, are masterly in the command of dramatic effects and contrasts."

STANDARD.

"Herr Gade's 'Psyche,' last night, was a legitimate success, and in this work the musical world has been enriched with something likely to endure."

MORNING POST.

"All that a sympathetic mind could suggest to clothe the story with becoming musical raiment has been done with skill and taste. . . The Cantata, as a whole work, will be as gladly welcomed by Choral Societies as 'The Crusaders' of the same composer. . . There is some very pleasing writing both for voices and orchestra."

ATHENÆUM.

"We think 'Psyche' likely to be one of the most popular of the composer's works. It presents no excessive difficulties to the executants, though it undoubtedly requires finished orchestral playing; but even without orchestra it will be found effective, and is well suited for choral societies of fair acquirements."

SUNDAY TIMES.

"The second part begins with an exquisite little scherso, leading to another trio, 'The birds in playful throng,' with chorus for the same voices (soprano, alto, and tenor), than which it would be impossible to imagine anything more tuneful and charming, the instrumentation here being simply masterly. . . The composer conducted, was warmly greeted, and was made the hero of an enthusiastic ovation at the close. In short, a perfect triumph was gained."

GUARDIAN.

"The music is always graceful and pretty, and admirably constructed. . . It need hardly be said that Mr. Gade was heartily applauded at the close of the performance; and without doubt 'Psyche' must be recorded as one of the great successes of the year 1882."

MIDLAND COUNTIES HERALD.

"The choral writing is very good, especially at the close of the second and fourth parts, whilst the instrumentation is as bright and elegant as we had a right to expect from this gifted composer."

RICHARD WAGNER.

By the time these lines reach the eye of our readers the excitement of the event which called them forth will have calmed down, and Wagnerian art, apart from Wagner, will we trust receive candid and impartial criticism. The brief telegram from Venice, dated February 13, announcing that "Richard Wagner, the celebrated composer, died here at four o'clock this afternoon," caused a sensation such as we have rarely witnessed; for the mournful news at once suspended even the semblance of antagonism, and those who had been ranged for years on opposite sides in the great Wagner controversy agreed to meet as brothers in the art which they mutually loved, and do homage to one who had so long and steadfastly fought for a faith which he held it a sacred duty to enforce. Richard Wagner was, in the truest sense of the word a hero, for he set himself a task which, in spite of bitter opposition, he bravely worked out; and those who may judge him as he sometimes mercilessly judged others, must remember that in his stern and unyielding nature lay the real secret of his success. As a boy he resented control, and as a man he despised it: growing with his growth, and strengthening with his strength, his theories, at first crude and vague, gradually took form and expanded even beyond their applicability to the art with which he most sympathised. The work which drew attention to his views, "Oper und Drama," was at first read as an exposition of the convictions of one who regarded the subject more from a philosophical than a musical point of view; and few at that time imagined that he would uncompromisingly put into action a theory of opera which should aim at revolutionising the works which had for years been accepted by the musical public. But those who reasoned thus knew but little of the man who was destined, by his indomitable perseverance, not only to show to the world that lyrical works of the highest class could be moulded upon the plan he so eloquently expounded, but that he could raise up a host of adherents to his cause who would preach his doctrines, and, enlisting under the banner of this new Prophet, attempt to drive believers in the old faith from the field. In his early opera, "Rienzi," we see but little of that tendency to revolt against the form of the lyric drama then in vogue; but, in justice to the composer, it must be conceded that in this work he purposely wrote for the people rather than for himself, in the hope of obtaining a position which might enable him to introduce his reforms gradually. But the "Flying Dutchman" revealed Wagner in his true light, for here we find a powerful drama primarily asserting itself, the music to which seems to grow spontaneously from the action, and accompanied by scenery which aids, without overpowering, the general effect of the work. "Tannhäuser"—another step in advance—experienced a fate which would have deterred a less sanguine man from pursuing a theory which could scarcely find favour with audiences nurtured upon works diametrically opposed to these principles. Accustomed to opposition, however, Wagner seemed strengthened rather than weakened in the practical advocacy of his theories; and, although goaded, no doubt by such opposition into the use of invectives, which may perhaps have done something towards injuring his cause, he rose once more, after a brief rest, and in "Lohengrin" reasserted with renewed vigour the tenets of the belief which he was resolved to uphold as long as he had power to wield a pen. Wagner's reception in Paris was, as might be expected, most dispiriting on each visit; and the thanks of all admirers of the composer are indeed due to the King of Bavaria (with all his eccentricities, an ardent advocate of Wagner's theories as shown in his operas) who invited him to Munich, where a performance of his "Tristan und Isolde" rewarded him for much of his disappointment. His Bayreuth triumphs are well known to all our readers; and if his "Ring des Nibelungen," when brought to England, divided the lovers of the lyric drama into two factions, it must be remembered that party feeling on the merits of his works had already run somewhat high, and also that the advent of his compositions was accompanied with an invasion of German music and German singers which threatened for the moment to annihilate those national institutions which had been so long supported by the best patrons of the art. "Parsifal," which embodies the latest phase of Wagnerian art, has not yet been brought to judgment in this country; but it may reasonably be supposed that not only the music but the nature of the libretto would be fatal, at least for some time, to its due appreciation.

During the life of Wagner it was difficult indeed to gauge the real value of his contributions to musical art. The worker was so identified with his work that it seemed almost necessary to combat his theories before a listener dared to admit that he became wearied of his music. True it is that few could dispute the justice of his premises, but it might be just possible to disagree with his deductions from them. In "Oper und Drama," views are promulgated by no means new, for Gluck had advanced most of them before him; but they are so excellently supported that the reader feels under the influence of a mighty power, and awakens not from the spell until he finds that the inflexible carrying out of these views leads to the abandonment of that form which in the lyrical works that have grown into his affections for years, constituted the greatest charm. A picture-gallery, for example, contains paintings, each of which individually engages our attention, and the merit of which can be recalled after leaving it; but Wagner's Operas are like a panorama, which passes rapidly before us, dazzling our senses for a minute with artistic beauty, yet leaving only the impression of a longing for the power of concentrating our enjoyment upon some definite portion of the work. It may be asserted that if the theory is true, the reduction of the theory to practice must be equally so; but theories in art should be spoken only through an artist's works, in proof of which we may say that Beethoven—who first inspired Wagner with a consciousness of the real power of music—prefaced his immortal compositions with no announcement of the true mission of the art he so ennobled.

We have no desire here to do more than direct attention to what may be considered the vulnerable points in the teachings of a master who has drawn converts from all countries, and whose name—however we may differ in the value of his theories—will live in the annals of art, even more honoured perhaps as music grows to its true position in the world. Had he lived to multiply operas founded upon the model of "Parsifal," we cannot now say whether he would have strengthened or weakened the cause he had at heart; but the legacy he has bequeathed to us will sufficiently attest how a great artist can work, even when he has to create, rather than to appeal to, an audience capable of rightly judging the result of his efforts.

As our readers will doubtless be glad to become acquainted with the life of a man who has absorbed so much attention amongst artists for so many years, we quote a memoir of the composer from The Musical Review, written by one thoroughly conversant with the facts of his career:—

"Wilhelm Richard Wagner, who died at Venice on February 13, was born May 22, 1813, at Leipzig, where his father held a small municipal appointment. After his death, which took place in the same year as the composer's birth, the widow married L. Geyer, an actor, and afterwards a portrait-painter of some merit. He, however, also died before the composer had finished his seventh year. We know little of his influence on his stepson. It seems that to some extent he recognised in the small boy artistic talent of some kind, and wanted to make him a painter, but Wagner proved an awkward pupil. At this time he used to practice by the ear little tunes on the piano, and it is said that, hearing him one day engaged in this manner, his stepfather remarked to the mother, in the weak voice of an almost dying man, 'Do you think he has talent for music?' After Geyer had died, Wagner tells us, his twice-widowed mother came into the nursery to repeat to each of the children the father's parting words. To himself she said, 'He wanted to make something of you.' 'For a long time afterwards,' Wagner adds, 'I used to imagine that something would become of me.'

"However, the idea of bringing him up as a musician, if ever seriously entertained, was soon abandoned. He was sent to an excellent day-school, the Kreuzschule at Dresden, and received only occasional pianoforte lessons from his private Latin master. His progress in that noble art seems to have been anything but satisfactory. Instead of practising scales and other useful digital exercises, he loved to hammer away at overtures and symphonies with a most abominable fingering of his own. After a short time his master gave him up as hopeless. 'He was right,' Wagner says; 'I have never learned to play the piano in all my life.' The truth is that he, the great virtuoso of the orchestra, looked down on that supplementary instrument with some disdain.

"His first attempts at original production date from a very early period. They were not of a musical but of a poetic kind. At the age of eleven we find him pondering over the plan of a gigantic drama, conceived in the spirit of Shakespeare, but intended to far outdo the tragic pathos of that master-mind. Wagner describes his tragedy as a kind of compound of 'Hamlet' and 'Lear.' 'The design,' he says, 'was grand in the extreme. Forty-two people died in the course of the piece, and I was obliged to let most of them reappear as ghosts in the last acts, for want of living characters.' The piece, doubtless, was quite as ridiculous as this humorous self-criticism implies, but it nevertheless indicates in its embryonic stage that Titanic struggle for the utmost expansion of artistic forms which characterises the whole of Wagner's career. It proved important for his development in another respect. Not long after his play was finished he became acquainted with Beethoven's works, which excited his impressionable youthful mind to the utmost. His witnessing a performance of that master's music to Goethe's 'Egmont' may be considered as the decisive turning-point in Wagner's life, for it filled him with emulative zeal to supply his own tragedy with a musical accompaniment of equal grandeur—a bold resolve certainly in one who had yet to learn the rudiments of musical art, but again indicative of that indomitable courage and energy which conquers at last. He now saw himself compelled to make some preparatory theoretical studies; the first difficulties of thorough bass and harmony once bravely encountered and overcome impelled him to attack new problems; his attention became rivetted, his genius roused; he had imperceptibly grown into a musician. We, of course, do not wish to assert that by some miraculous process he acquired the mechanical part of the most difficult of arts, without a good deal of previous study. On the contrary, he had to combine his fugues and puzzle out his counterpoint in exactly the same manner as lesser mortals are wont to do. Indeed, his struggle with merely formal difficulties seems to have been not an easy one. Patience and quiet application were wanting. His master could do nothing with such a pupil, and fairly put him down as a dunce, in musical matters at least; his family was in despair; only his own courage remained undaunted. He began writing overtures on a grand scale for the full orchestra, one of which—the ‘climax of his nonsensicalities,’ as he himself calls it—was actually performed in public, but excited only irrepressible hilarity on the part of the audience, greatly to the mortification of the aspiring young genius. This was his first period of ‘storm and stress,’ to use Carlyle’s words; everything was seething and bubbling. But soon the waters began to clear; his first disappointment cured him of his vanity: he began to see the necessity of theoretical knowledge, and a course of serious study under Cantor Weinlig resulted, as that excellent teacher expressed it, in Wagner’s independence of formal fetters. But more than any living master could teach him Wagner learned in his intercourse with the great dead. The well-known Heinrich Dorn, at that time a friend, now the bitterest enemy, of Wagner, has described the young student’s passionate, not to say violent, enthusiasm for Beethoven’s works. ‘I am doubtful,’ he writes, ‘whether there ever has been a young musician more familiar with the works of Beethoven than Wagner was at eighteen. He possessed most of the master’s overtures and large instrumental scores in copies made by himself: he went to bed with the sonatas, and rose again with the quartets. He sang the songs and whistled the concerti, for with the playing he could not get on very well. In brief, there was a regular furor Teutonicus, which, combined with considerable scientific culture and a peculiar activity of the mind, promised powerful shoots.’

“Beethoven was thus the loadstar of Wagner’s early aspirations, and well had it been for him had he never swerved from it. But he had still to pass through many errors before, cleansed in the fire of adversity, he could return to the original purity of its aims.

“The surroundings in which we next discover Wagner seem certainly anything but suited to a Beethoven enthusiast. To meet the exigencies of life, he had now to look for a more lucrative employment of his time than penning eccentric and inexecutable compositions; and the conductorship of a small operatic troupe at Magdeburg being offered to him, he accepted the position, the more eagerly as the unconventional ease of theatrical life tallied but too well with the bias of his nature. Neither were his artistic duties of a very elevated kind. He had chiefly to conduct the light productions of the French and Italian stages, then so much en vogue in Germany, and he himself confesses his childish joy in letting the orchestra ‘bang away,’ after a fashion, to right and left of his conductor’s desk. His own productions during this period distinctly show the signs of the atmosphere in which he moved. We will not encumber the reader’s memory with the titles of several operas and numerous pièces d’occasion which owe their origin to this time of pre-historic chaos. They were written for ephemeral applause, and without any conscientious scruples as to the artistic purity of their effects. But this abandonment of principle, fortunately, did not meet with its desired reward; only one of Wagner’s operas saw the light of the stage, and, owing to insufficient rehearsals and an accumulation of other unfavourable circumstances, proved a failure. We repeat that, upon the whole, this ill-luck must be considered a decidedly favourable circumstance. It may certainly be presumed that sooner or later his higher nature would have impelled him to leave the fleshpots of easy success for the toilsome desert-paths of ideal aims; but when or how this exodus might have taken place nobody can tell. As it was, the cares and troubles of his narrow sphere of action soon became intolerable to him. The small emoluments of his office were wholly insufficient to supply the demands of his refined, luxurious taste; and when, in a spirit of obstinate recklessness, he resolved upon marrying an actress, the exigencies of married life further entrained him already straitened circumstances. In addition to his domestic discomfort, he soon began to loathe the professional jealousies and intrigues which, combined with an utter want of artistic spirit, characterised the society in which his duties compelled him to mix.

“He felt that something must be done to save himself from this sea of miseries, and the step he took, in consequence, was quite in keeping with the undaunted energy of his nature. He resolved to write a great dramatic work, and, in order to preclude the possibility of his longer remaining in the narrow sphere of provincial stage life, he fixed upon a subject, the appropriate treatment of which would require an amount of scenic splendour such as only the largest stages in Europe would have at their disposal. Rienzi, the last Tribune, was chosen as the hero of his opera, and to Paris, at that time the musical, as well as the social centre of civilised Europe, the composer looked for a stage and a public.

“It is evident, neither does Wagner try to conceal it, that the chief purpose aimed at in ‘Rienzi’ was to obtain the applause of the multitude. From a psychological point of view it, therefore, scarcely marks a step in advance, and, indeed, abounds with concessions of artistic consciousness to the taste of the vulgar. But, amidst the platitudes of ordinary stage effects, we distinctly see, in the score of ‘Rienzi,’ the action of a tremendous dramatic force, scarcely conscious, as yet, and clogged with earthy encumbrances, but capable of growth and purification. Wagner wrote the poetry and finished the music of the first two acts of ‘Rienzi’ at Riga, where he had conducted the opera for some time. In the summer of 1839 he embarked in a sailing vessel bound for London, on his way to Paris. The voyage lasted more than three weeks. Three times they were caught in terrific storms, and on one occasion the captain had to seek shelter in a Norwegian harbour. Wagner's imagination was deeply struck with the wonders and terrors of the deep, and the impressions thus received he was soon to embody in a work to which we shall have to return. In the September of the same year he arrived at Paris, supplied by Meyerbeer with introductions to theatrical managers and full of sanguine expectations. One slightly shudders in thinking of the possible consequences which a great Paris success might have had on Wagner's further career. Perhaps he might have been content to share with Meyerbeer, Rossini, and Halévy the lucrative laurels of a European reputation; but fortune, unlike herself, proved constant to him in her unkindness; all his attempts at obtaining publicity for his works were frustrated, and, to save himself from actual starvation, he had to go through the most degrading stages of musical slavery, such as arranging tunes from popular operas for the cornet-à-piston.

"Again the tide of despair was rising higher and higher—again something must be done and was done by Wagner to stem its destructive progress; but in what he did, and how he did it, we see the process of purification which his artistic character had undergone during this second trial of 'hope deferred.' 'Rienzi,' as we said before, was written entirely with a view to outward success, to which the higher demands of art were to a great extent sacrificed; in the work which Wagner now began he scarcely hoped, nor even wished, for this success. It was conceived and written entirely to supply a demand of his own nature—the demand, that is, of pouring out the anxieties and toilings of his soul in his song. In this way music gave him help and comfort in his supreme need. The work we are referring to is 'The Flying Dutchman.' It was conceived during the eventful voyage to London; the music was written at Meudon, where Wagner had retired from Paris in the spring of 1841.

"'Rienzi,' finished in November, 1840, concludes the first period of Wagner's career. It was the time of his violent struggle for notoriety and self-assertion, without regard to the artistic purity of the means applied. The mode of his expression was confined to the forms of the French grand opera as established by Spontini, Meyerbeer, and others; hence this period may be described as his operatic period. With 'The Flying Dutchman' Wagner enters a new stage of development. Henceforth he disregards the requirements of vulgar taste, or tastelessness. His works become the immediate effusion of his poetical inspiration, to which the forms of absolute music have gradually to give way. Ultimately he throws the whole apparatus of the opera, with its empty display of vocal skill and scenic spectacle, overboard. Even the name becomes odious to him; his new creations are termed 'Music-dramas.' For the full appreciation of his vast schemes he looks to those to come rather than to the living generation. Hence the sobriquet—invented by his adversaries and adopted by him—'The Music of the Future.' In 'The Flying Dutchman' these new tendencies appear as yet in an all but embryonic state; only one circumstance we will point out in connection with the subject. Wagner's adversaries boldly assert that his reformatory deeds were the result of previous deliberate speculation, although the comparative dates of his dramatic and his theoretical works clearly prove the contrary. If a further proof of the spontaneity of his efforts were required, his mode of conceiving 'The Flying Dutchman' would furnish it; for it was only the symbolic representation of his own personal sufferings at the time. Friendless and loveless amongst strangers, he could realise but too well the type of his hero, who, doomed to roam on the wild waves of the ocean, longs for home and the redeeming love of woman. This personal character of his poetry he involuntarily transferred to his music, and was thus ultimately led to the breaking of forms insufficient to contain his impassioned utterances.

"In the meantime his worldly prospects had undergone an unexpected favourable change. His 'Rienzi' had been accepted for performance by the Dresden theatre, and in 1842 Wagner left Paris for that city in order to prepare his work for the stage. The first performance took place in October of the same year, and its brilliant success led to the composer's engagement as conductor of the Royal Opera at Dresden.

"It was natural that this first smile of fortune after so much adversity should have filled Wagner with elation. But he was not the man to rest on his laurels. During his stay at Paris he had become acquainted with the old story of Tannhäuser, the knightly singer who tarried in the mountain of Venus. This story, in connection with an imaginary prize-singing at Wartburg, the residence of the Dukes of Thuringia, struck him at once as eminently adapted for dramatic purposes. The impression was increased when, on his way to Dresden, he visited the romantic old castle surrounded by the nimbus of history and romance, and overlooking a wide and varied expanse of field and forest. The poem of 'Tannhäuser' was written soon afterwards, even before the first performance of 'Rienzi'; the music was finished by the end of 1844. The fundamental idea strikes one as somewhat similar to that of 'The Flying Dutchman.' It is again the self-surrendering love of pure woman which in death releases the hero. Compared with its predecessor 'Tannhäuser' marks a decided advance, both from a dramatic and musical point of view. The character of the hero, representing in its large typical features one of the deepest problems of human nature, stands boldly forth from the chiaroscuro of its romantic surroundings; and the abundance of melodious strains (some of them—as for instance, the celebrated March—of a broadly popular character) in 'Tannhäuser' has, perhaps contributed more to the spreading of its author's name than any of his other works.

"At the first performance at Dresden, in 1845, the reception of 'Tannhäuser' was, however, much less favourable than might have been expected. The public was evidently astonished and somewhat disappointed at this new language, so widely differing from the coarser accents of 'Rienzi.' Altogether the prospects of Wagner's popularity as an operatic writer seemed to dwindle more and more. The performance of his 'Flying Dutchman' at Berlin had little more than a succès d'estime, while even that was scarcely obtained by 'Rienzi' at Hamburg. The brief glimmer of hope was waning rapidly, and Wagner's disappointment was now all the more bitter for his previous experience of success. But even more than by his personal ill-fortune he was disgusted by the rank spirit of narrow-minded coterie with which the most prominent German theatres were infested. Neither the progress of his own nor that of any other true art could be expected under such circumstances. As years advanced, Wagner's disappointment grew into a state of morbid despondency, in which change at any price seemed a relief. In this mood, and more from a sense of antagonism to things existing than from any distinct political persuasion, Wagner took an active part in the revolutionary risings of 1848 and 1849. The dream of liberty in Saxony and its unpleasant interruption by Prussian bayonets are matters of history. Wagner personally had to pay dearly for his short illusion. As a matter of course he lost official employment and was, moreover, compelled again to leave country and friends, a homeless exile. Before following him on his new wanderings, however, we must mention in a few words a work which owes its existence to the period immediately before the outbreak of the revolution: we are speaking of 'Lohengrin,' the fourth of Wagner's acknowledged operas, the music of which was finished in March, 1848. The story of the Knight of the Swan, originally founded on local traditions of the lower Rhine, Wagner owed to the same mediæval compilation which had been the source of 'Tannhäuser.' In his version it appears combined with the mystic tradition of the 'Grail' and the spiritual order of knights guarding the holy vessel. Lohengrin, the son of Parcival, King of the Grail, leaves his blissful abode, to save Elsa, Princess of Brabant, from a false accusation of having killed her young brother. The love of Elsa and her deliverer forms the main subject of the drama, the tragic key-note being touched when Elsa, despite her promise of implicit faith, asks the name and abode of the mystical knight. This wild craving of Elsa to pierce the mystery which seems to shroud her husband from the warm clasp of her hand, is a touch of intense psychological truth. The style of Wagner's music is quite in accordance with the elevated poetical intentions it serves to illustrate. The supernatural and natural elements are blended in his strains in the most marvellous manner, and rarely, if ever, is the impression marred by those purely theatrical effects which not unfrequently occur in 'Tannhäuser.'

"On his flight from his country, Wagner turned first to Paris, where, as usual, disappointment lay in store for him. After a short stay in France he settled at Zurich, in Switzerland, and now, when the conductor's bâton was wrenched from his hand, took up the pen of the critic to fight again the good fight of art in this new field of action. We must here again remind our readers that his great theoretical work, 'Oper und Drama,' was written after his first four operas had been finished, and after even the plan of his largest and most advanced work, the 'Nibelungen' trilogy had been conceived and partly executed. His dramas, so far from being fashioned according to a certain theory, were no more than the foundation on which that theory was constructed.

"After his settling at Zurich, Wagner's connection with the public performance of his works ceased almost entirely for ten years; but perhaps no time of his life had been more fertile in lasting results than this period of involuntary eclipse. After the many excitements of his public career, the seclusion of exile could not but be of beneficial consequence to a nature so apt to be entirely absorbed by the excitement of life and action. The first fruit of his contemplative retirement was the just-mentioned theoretical work, in which the vague aspirations of his earlier years came at last to a distinct conscious expression. But how little his creative power was affected by speculative exertions he soon proved by new dramatic works wider in scope and deeper in conception than anything he had done before. We are speaking of the gigantic trilogy, or, more correctly, tetralogy of the 'Ring of the Nibelung,' in which the oldest tradition of Teutonic lore is embodied, and which for that reason alone may justly aspire to the place of the national work of art of Germany. Its dimensions are so colossal that ever so short a sketch even of the story would far exceed the limits of this notice. Wagner was occupied with its completion for more than twenty years, the book in its present form having been begun about 1851, and the last note of the music written in 1876. Twice, however, during this interval his attention was diverted from the 'Nibelungen' by other artistic plans of no less import and beauty. The first of these was his dramatic treatment of the old tragic story of Tristan and Isolde, written and set to music between 1856-59. 'Tristan and Isolde' is the fifth of Wagner's acknowledged dramatic works, its first performance (at Munich, 1865) following that of 'Lohengrin,' after an interval of fifteen years. The step in advance marked by it in its author's development, and in that of dramatic music in general, is proportionate to this lapse of time. According to his own assertion, Wagner wrote it with the full concentrated power of his inspiration, freed at last from the fetters of conventional operatic forms, with which he had broken here definitely and irrevocably.

"After the stated facts, it cannot surprise that this music-drama (for opera would be a decided misnomer) has become a bone of contention between the adherents of the liberal and conservative schools of music. Many people who greatly admire 'certain things' in 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin' draw the line at 'Tristan and Isolde,' which, on the other hand, is considered by the advanced party as the representative work of a new epoch in art. A musician's position to this work may indeed be considered as decisive as to his general tendency towards the past or future.

"The other important work carried on at the same time with the 'Nibelungen' was a comic opera, the 'Meistersinger von Nürnberg,' which was finished in October, 1869. The first draft of the book was written as early as 1845, immediately after the composition of 'Tannhäuser,' with an intention of parodying the romantic singers of the middle ages by their bourgeois counterfeits, in the manner of the antique satyr-drama. The second version of the libretto, however, has been considerably modified. The worthy burghers of the beautiful German city appear in a more favourable light, the formal philistinism of their poetic doings being leavened by an admixture of true homely feeling. Hans Sachs, the poet and shoemaker, round whom, as their centre figure, the numerous dramatis personæ are grouped, represents the rising citizen of the sixteenth century in his strength and justified pride of work. The character throughout is noble and grand in conception, and ranks among the highest creations of Wagner's muse. A romantic love-story of sweetest charm is interwoven with the scenes of busy citizen life, and in the treatment of the latter Wagner displayed throughout a power of humorous delineation for which his warmest admirers had scarcely given him credit. Wherever the 'Meistersinger' has been adequately performed the success has been brilliant, and at the present day the work keeps its place on the répertoires of the great German theatres together with his first four operas. This is more than can be said of 'Tristan,' which, although received with enthusiasm on two or three special occasions (in London, for instance), seems as yet too remote from the taste and understanding of ordinary amateurs to meet with general appreciation.

"The remaining important facts of Wagner's biography can be summed up in few words. In 1861 he went to Paris to superintend the performance of 'Tannhäuser,' which ended in the celebrated fiasco of the opera, owing perhaps more to political than to artistic prejudices. Previous to the fatal event three concerts at the Théâtre Italien, consisting of Wagner's works, and conducted by himself, were received with enthusiasm, and amongst those who raised their voices in his defence against popular condemnation were men like Gautier, Champfleury and Charles Baudelaire—some small comfort to Wagner, perhaps, in his third and worst Parisian disappointment. In 1864 the art-loving King of Bavaria called Wagner to Munich, to assist in the reorganisation of the theatrical and musical institutions of that city. Here he resided for two years, and witnessed the excellent performance of 'Tristan and Isolde,' under the direction of Dr. von Bülow.

"It was in 1876 that Wagner's indomitable energy was rewarded by a triumph such as no composer in the history of music had previously won. His colossal trilogy, 'Der Ring des Nibelungen,' was brought to a hearing at Bayreuth, in presence of a unique assemblage of musicians and literary savants from all parts of the world. For more than a quarter of a century the work had been gradually assuming the form in which we know it at present, this evolutionary process continuing concurrently with other labours of an exhaustive nature. The foundation stone of the Wagner Theatre was laid in 1872, and the building is a durable testimony to the revolutionary ideas of its architect in the matter of theatrical construction. Nothing was wanting to render the production of the trilogy an unexampled success. The scenic arrangements, by Herr Brandt, of Dresden, were novel in design and beauty; the invisible orchestra, under Herr Richter, was pronounced by friends and foes alike inimitable; and the principal artists included the most eminent performers of the leading German opera-houses.

"For some years the Wagnerian theory and practice had been gradually making way in England. 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin' had been promised again and again by the impresarii of the rival Italian Operas; but the lead was reserved for Mr. Wood, who produced 'Der Fliegende Holländer' at the fag end of an unsuccessful season in 1870. In 1875 'Lohengrin' was given both at Covent Garden and Drury Lane, and, though barbarously mutilated, at once took a hold on the popular mind, which time has steadily increased. In the concert-room the Wagner Society, established for the purpose of sending material aid to Bayreuth, rendered excellent service to the cause; and the echo of the triumph in August, 1876, resulted in a Wagner Festival of a strange and noteworthy but unsatisfactory character in the Albert Hall in the following summer. Eight concerts were given, and the composer, who attended in person, was the recipient of immense applause. After this the Wagnerian question slumbered for a time—if we except the conscientious and highly appreciated rendering of the early works under Mr. Carl Rosa—but last year, by a strange series of coincidences, the whole of the master's music-dramas, from 'Rienzi' to 'Die Götterdämmerung' were brought before the London public, and, despite some greatly disadvantageous circumstances, their reception was highly favourable. Meanwhile Wagner had been at work upon 'Parsifal,' a musical poem based on the 'Grail' legends of Wolfram von Eschenbach and other mediæval writers. The production of this singularly beautiful and impressive sacred drama in July last is too fresh in the recollection of musicians to render any details necessary. The performance was nearly as satisfactory as that of the 'Ring of the Nibelung,' six years previously, and the signal financial success gained during seventeen representations afforded a strong proof of the growth of the composer's popularity during the intervening period. It had been Wagner's custom for years to pass the winter in the South, and last autumn he took up his residence in Venice. Here he revived, on Christmas Eve, a symphony written at the age of nineteen, and a fortnight later he conducted a performance of the overture to 'Zauberflöte.' Thus his latest musical experiences were closely associated with classical forms of composition, which he was popularly supposed to despise. It cannot be said that death has arrived prematurely for Richard Wagner. The news of his sudden departure is necessarily a shock to all who had followed his career with admiration for gifts so unparalleled; but he had well and worthily finished the work it was given him to do, and he was mercifully called away before the inevitable period of mental decay had arrived to mar the lustre of his reputation."

"ELIJAH"

A COMPARISON OF THE ORIGINAL AND REVISED SCORES.

BY JOSEPH BENNETT.

PART II.

No. 31—Aria, "O rest in the Lord."

Originally the opening phrase of this air began thus:—

In this form it still stands in the Coda. The printed score shows a few other changes, which mostly concern themselves with details of the orchestration, and are not important enough to call for specific notice.

No. 32—Chorus, "He that shall endure to the end."

No change.

No. 33—Recitative, "Night falleth around me, O Lord."

Mendelssohn appears to have had some trouble with this Recitative, since there is evidence proving that he wrote at least three versions. The number in the MS. is headed with a pencil note, written by the composer, which says: "This Recit. is to come instead of the Recit. No. 33 which was sent before." The one "sent before" ran thus:—

THE ANGEL. RECIT.

Thoroughly dissatisfied with the foregoing, Mendelssohn, as already stated, wrote the Recit. a second time, making it longer and of greater importance. The second version—that used at Birmingham—is appended:—

out, stand on the mount be-fore the

Lord, for there His glo-ry will ap-pear... and shine on thee.

Thy face must be veil-ed

for He draw-eth near.

The changes subsequently made can be traced by comparison of this second version with the Recit. as printed. One of the most important was the addition of a clarinet part.

No. 34—Chorus, "Behold! God the Lord passed by."

With reference to this elaborate number, there is only to say that, substantially, we have it now as first written. Mendelssohn's revision went no farther than employing the wind instruments more liberally and using the organ in support of the voices on the passage "But yet the Lord was not in the tempest," and on the other passages corresponding.

No. 35—Recitative, "Above Him stood the Seraphim."

Neither this Recitative nor anything of a like kind appears in the MS., "Holy, holy" following immediately after "Behold! God the Lord."

No. 36—Quartet and Chorus, "Holy is God the Lord."

In retouching this grand number the composer added two horns in F and an ophicleide to his score. He made no other change, apart from a few details of instrumentation, such as writing in the impressive pp drum-roll on the last phrase.

No. 36—Choral Recitative, "Go, return upon thy way."

In the MS. the place where this number should be is taken by a Recitative for Elijah, "O Lord, I have heard of Thee," leading to the Air "For the mountains shall depart." The Recitative, as appears from the book of words, was sung at Birmingham, and the Choral Recitative is entirely an afterthought. The original ran as follows:—

Recit.

O Lord, I have heard of Thee by the ear, but

Str. f

now mine eye see-eth Thee, Therefore my heart is glad, my glo-ry re-joic-eth, and my

flesh in hope shall rest. . .

dim. p

No. 37—Arioso, "For the mountains shall depart." On a blank page in the MS. is written "No. 37 to come." It came, as we all know, but not into this copy.

No. 38—Chorus, "Then did Elijah the Prophet." Mendelssohn slightly changed one brief passage in the voice parts of this Chorus. Otherwise the MS. and the printed score agree. The passage in question will be found on pages 297-8 of the latter, and may be compared with the following:—

And he went by a whirlwind, he went by a whirlwind, he a whirlwind, a whirlwind,

No. 39—Aria, "Then shall the righteous shine."

This air, as we find it in the printed score, corresponds exactly with that in the MS., where, however, it leads without break into a Recitative for the contralto voice. The Recitative was sung at Birmingham by Miss M. Williams, to the words "Now Elijah walked with God, and he was not, for God took him." We give it below with the original German:—

No. 40—Recitative, "Behold! God hath sent Elijah the Prophet."

A glance at the original, transcribed below, shows that Mendelssohn rewrote this Recitative, putting it into the key of C, and—happy thought—adding a trumpet part. Moreover, he marked the greater portion to be sung in tempo, instead of recitative:—

MUSIC IN ITS RELATION TO OTHER ARTS.

In the last number we dealt with the four great canons of composition in art—Principality, Symmetry, Repetition, Contrast. We shall now pass to Interchange, Gradation, and Simplicity; touch upon the manner in which genius deals with the laws of all art; refer to appropriateness and grotesque; and draw some interesting parallels between architecture and music, and between literature and music.

5. INTERCHANGE.

From the law of contrast Mr. Ruskin passes to the law of interchange—a law which is really but a subdivision of that of contrast, or rather perhaps a limitation of it, because by it contrasted masses are so connected that they shall not be separated masses.

The words with which Mr. Ruskin introduces this law are these:—

"Closely connected with the law of contrast is a law which enforces the unity of opposite things by giving to each a portion of the character of the other. If, for instance, you divide a shield into two masses of colour all the way down—suppose blue and white—and put a bar or figure of an animal partly on one division, partly on the other, you will find it pleasant to the eye if you make the part of the animal blue which comes on the white half, and white which comes on the blue half. This is done in heraldry, partly for the sake of perfect intelligibility, but yet more for the sake of delight in interchange of colour, since, in all ornamentation whatever, the practice is continual in the ages of good design."

Now this interchange between two predominant colours in painting or heraldry has its exact counterpart in music in those movements which have two predominant subjects. At some part of the composition we are certain to find them more or less intertwined in such a manner as to show that they are not disconnected matter, but have a practical connection with each other, and have been associated together, not at haphazard, but with a well-considered design. The two subjects are, in fact, exhibited in their relation to each other much as a logician would bring into prominence the points of connection between his major and minor premises. The subjects in music are interchanged just as the colours are in painting.

6. GRADATION.

Another law, opposed to the law of contrast, is the law of gradation. Mr. Ruskin says:—

"Whenever you lay on a mass of colour, be sure that, however large it may be, or however small, it shall be gradated. No colour exists in Nature under ordinary circumstances without gradation. . . . And it does not matter how small the touch of colour may be, though not larger than the smallest pin's head, if one part of it is not darker than the rest it is a bad touch; for it is not merely because the natural fact is so that your colour should be gradated: the preciousness and pleasantness of the colour itself depend more on this than on any other of its qualities, for gradation is to colours just what curvature is to lines, both being felt to be beautiful by the pure instinct of every human mind, and both considered as types expressing the law of gradual change and progress in the human soul itself."

And further on in the same letter, speaking of curvature, the writer specifies variation as one of the two characters by which "graceful curvature is distinguished from ungraceful"—"that is to say, its never remaining equal in degree at different parts of its course." The same maxim may be applied to gradation of colours—that is, the degrees by which dark passes to light must be always and regularly increasing or diminishing.

Gradation of two kinds is to be found in music, and the two are frequently to be found together, just as in painting gradation of colour and curvature of line may be, and commonly are, combined. There is gradation in quantity of sound—that is, a constant change from loud to soft or from soft to loud; and there is also, but perhaps less often, gradation of pace—that is, a constant change in time, from quick to slow or from slow to quick.

And just as a graceful curve is always increasing in degree, so the gradation of sound in music is always increasing in degree. So that the straight lines with which crescendos and decrescendos are marked do not accurately represent the composer's intention. If for the ordinary marks—

we were to substitute these—as indicating that the crescendo is to gather force as it rises and lose it as it falls, we should more accurately depict what we hear in music, and we should see at once the analogy between gradation of sound and curvature of line.

Where these gradations are very decided they are marked in the music by the words crescendo or decrescendo, and rallentando or accelerando.

But beyond these marked features there are the more delicate changes which are too slight for any marking and which may vary, without any inaccuracy, not only with different performers, but from time to time with the same performer—the gentle pressing forward or holding back, with tender care, of some one note or group of notes—which may be compared to the gradation of a touch of colour "not larger than the smallest pin's head" spoken of by Mr. Ruskin. This is what we call "phrasing." It is by his phrasing that we can tell whether the player has grasped the true hidden meanings of the composer, which cannot be placed on paper.

In the last quotation there were three remarkable words used by Mr. Ruskin. He says: "No colour exists in Nature under ordinary circumstances without gradation." This exceptional law of Nature is obeyed by musicians as it is by other artists. The straight line and the even colour may appear in painting for a special purpose. The horizon at sea is a straight line, as though it would say, Man's power, like his sight, is limited. So, also, while gradation in music is almost universal, the hard line may appear to excite a special feeling, as awe, for instance. At the end of Mendelssohn's 98th Psalm the inevitable future Judgment which none can escape is suspended over us as the voices thunder forth, to the same note, repeated with the same force, "He shall judge, judge with truth."

7. SIMPLICITY.

In every art we know that simplicity affects us more than the most Titanic piling up of masses. The material with which he deals compels a sculptor to be simple. Witness the force which Flaxman has expressed in fewest lines. In the old masters, it is the simplicity of style that compels us to admiration. Why was the introduction to the last act of the "Africaine" encored seven times on the production of the opera? Because the house was carried away by the simplicity of a few bars of melody in absolute unison without any accompaniment. But that melody is written with an exquisite knowledge of the peculiarities of the instruments to which it is assigned. And thus it is that in music, as in everything else, it requires real genius to be simple. A man may crowd his score with parts, but all the scraping and blowing in the world will not produce the effect of the first four notes of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, or of some of Mozart's simple movements. Mendelssohn in his choral works almost always flies to unison for the voices in his most telling passages. No composition is more respected than the "Hallelujah" Chorus in the "Messiah," and yet observe its simplicity.

We have thus endeavoured to show that the laws and those only by which critics judge those arts which appeal to the eye are applicable also to music. We now propose to draw a few parallels, which, if they are more accidental, are probably not quite so unentertaining as those which have already been suggested.

OPERATIONS OF GENIUS.

In the older religious pictures there is a sort of Gregorian stiffness in the arrangement of the attendant saints—two on each side, with undisguised symmetry. Now, in the Madonna di San Sisto, Raphael has observed the law of symmetry, and even the number of four attendant figures; but, by a stroke of genius, the stiff line has vanished, and the two little angels, dropped to the bottom of the picture, open out an altogether new field of thought; and yet this change in composition is but a development of the old grouping.

The sonata form, as finally settled by Haydn, with the requirement that the second subject should appear in the key of the dominant, was as fixed as the grouping of one of Perugino's pictures. And where it has since been departed from it is interesting to observe how the departure is a development of the old rule, and not an infringement of it.

In music, as in painting, and in every art, we see genius observing the underlying truth of a rule while infringing the letter. The merely clever artist will always be within rule, and always be right; but it is reserved to genius to revivify the spirit which has given birth to a rule by casting away the body in which it has been petrified.

The attention of the Head Master of Christ's Hospital having been called to Coleridge when a boy low down in the school, he inquired of the class master concerning him. The class master reported that Coleridge was a very dull boy—if asked for a rule of grammar, he never knew it, but always invented one of his own.

APPROPRIATENESS.

Frescoes have this about them which cannot be said of pictures—that we generally see them in the light for which the artist painted. Statuary, too, by its bulk has the same advantage, and in architecture of course the design is governed by the site.

There is no opera more often played at Covent Garden than the "Barbiere," and yet the audience never seem to see that it is utterly unsuited to a stage of such magnitude. Auber was a good stage-manager, and the length of the introductions to songs and other details in his operas are notably governed by the stage for which they were intended. In the endings of many movements in his masses, Mozart has obviously studied the acoustic peculiarities of churches. Thus the repetition of the key-note alone avoided the clash on his delicate ear of ill-assorted harmonies. He felt this; subsequent science has taught us what he felt.

GROTESQUE.

A most interesting occupation would be to study the analogy between the grotesque in music and in other arts. It is sufficient here just to touch the subject. In his "Modern Painters" Mr. Ruskin, after stating that the grotesque should not be elaborated, says:—

"What is thus doubtfully true of the pathetic grotesque is assuredly and always true of the jesting grotesque. So far as it expresses any transient flash of wit or satire, the less labour of line or colour given to its expression the better: elaborate jesting being always intensely painful."

How well this describes the touches of humour which we meet with in Haydn and Beethoven!

ARCHITECTURE AND MUSIC.

Good design in architecture is wonderfully like good fugue-writing. It relies on two principles—unity of general conception and variety of detail. We may note this especially in the romanesque, with its endless variety of treatment of an arcade with little columns, all generally alike, but found on examination to vary in capital, in shaft, and in base.

But there are many points of happy resemblance between music and architecture. For instance, there is many a progression which by its breadth and other properties is suited to a bass part, though it could never form part of the superstructure. We could no more substitute the bass for the treble of Tallis's litany than the base of a column for its capital.

There is also a parallel between the appropriate treatment of an instrument in music and of a material in architecture. A design suitable for stone is inappropriate in brick or wood; and a violin passage is inconvenient or impossible for a wind instrument.

Again, there is some analogy between the superimposed orders in Renaissance architecture—take, for example, the church of St. Mary in the Strand—and the successive movements of a sonata. The architectural orders always follow each other in a definite succession; so do the movements of the sonata. Then the architect takes measures to increase the importance of the cornice of the highest order, so that it shall not only be the finish of its own order, but also distinctly the finish of the whole building. For example, in the exterior of St. Paul's Cathedral there are two entablatures of the same proportion; but, in the upper, brackets supporting the cornice are introduced on the frieze, thereby giving emphasis to the upper storey. Similarly in a sonata the close of the last movement is commonly more decided, more satisfying, as the close of the entire work, than the termination of any previous movement.

The repetitions of a ground bass resemble a line of identical columns, which yet are not monotonous from the varied backgrounds and surroundings with which they are seen. One stands out in bold relief against a window, another fades away into a distant wall. In one case we see an angle of the capital, in another case the side; and so, while all are alike, each has a different aspect. The plain circle of a Tuscan or Doric capital is less modified by a change of position on the part of the spectator, than the more ornate Ionic or Corinthian capital; this is perhaps the reason why the latter orders are more employed in interiors than the former.

Again in classical architecture, the form is old, but the skill of the architect is in the treatment. So with fugue: we do not look at the originality of the subject, but at the manner in which it is treated.

The different means which are taken to soften the hard line of a cornice against the sky—by a balustrade, for instance—are like a coda in the subdominant after a full close. If with the hand or a stick we conceal the balustrade at the top of the Treasury buildings or of St. Paul's, we have the same sense of abruptness of finish as we have in a movement in which the key of the subdominant is not employed towards the close.

The minuet and trio is a form in music which is the exact type of a certain treatment which we find in Renaissance architecture. The minuet is a movement complete in itself enfolding another movement, the trio, also complete in itself; but the trio and minuet are of nearly equal dimensions. We have many specimens of a smaller movement enclosed in one comparatively much larger. Thus in a finale we have sometimes a short movement introduced as an episode, which is so complete that it may be treated as a miniature movement of development with free fantasia and all essential parts—a sort of picture within a picture. For example, the finale of Mozart's First Pianoforte Sonata, in the key of F major, includes a complete little movement of twenty-two bars in the key of F minor.

Similarly, in Renaissance architecture, doors, windows and recesses are frequently treated in an order different from that of the main building, and are, as it were, separate movements, complete in themselves, included in another larger movement. For example, in St. Peter's, Vere Street, by Gibbs, the sacrum is Ionic and is embraced by the general Corinthian order of the building, exactly like a trio by a minuet. And that a similar principle may be applied in the case of ornamentation of buildings with colour we have the authority of Mr. Aitcheson. In a paper on "Colour as applied to Architecture," read at the London Institute on December 19, 1881, Mr. Aitcheson says:—

"But the obtaining of one suffused colour need not prevent us from making any deep recess—or portion that is so cut off as to make itself a separate object—a spot of brilliancy or coloured loveliness quite different from the main colour of the decoration."

Now, if we glance at the comparative history of architecture and music, we shall find that there is some analogy between the five species of counterpoint and the five orders of classical architecture, and also the successive periods of English Gothic architecture. We are indebted to Professor Macfarren for the suggestion of a comparison between the five species of counterpoint and the five orders of classical architecture, but the comparison with Gothic architecture is still more striking.

The most massive species of counterpoint is that which moves no faster than the subject; it is full of dignity and stands firm, like the heavy Doric or the massive Norman.

More ornamental is the counterpoint which moves twice as fast as the subject, two notes to one, like the lighter Tuscan and the airy First-pointed Gothic.

Still more fanciful and more modern is the third species of counterpoint. In its common form of four notes to one, it has the prettiness of Ionic. But under this species are also grouped three notes to one and six notes to one, so that it has all the varied beauty of Middle-pointed Gothic, whether geometrical or flamboyant; and we may perhaps some day sublimate from this species of counterpoint something as refined as what was once ironically termed the "early late middle pointed."

Then advancing science discovered that wonderful ornament in music the suspension. The endless motion of the third species was checked at once by this new discovery. This is like the Corinthian, which is more stately than the Ionic. But it still more closely resembles the square-set early Perpendicular Gothic, which effected a complete revolution in architecture.

The fifth species of counterpoint is a florid form of the fourth, a figure derived from the third species being employed to conceal the true construction. Here, then, we have the third and fourth species of counterpoint combined to make a fifth species just as in classical architecture the third and fourth orders, Ionic and Corinthian, are combined to make a fifth, called Composite. And the true construction of the counterpoint is concealed by the florid ornament, just as in the later florid perpendicular architecture the true construction is often concealed by the superimposed ornament.

LITERATURE AND MUSIC.

Hitherto no reference has been made to poetry; but poetry may serve to illustrate how far music may be allowed to imitate the sounds of nature. It may safely be said that any imitation of natural sounds must, in poetry, be wrapped up in words—that is to say, the sounds must not be imitated by the mouth, but words may be employed which are suggestive of the sounds.

The somewhat trite quotation from Pope's "Odyssey," in which the labour of Sisyphus in getting his stone up the hill is contrasted with the facility with which the stone rolls down again, will make this clear:—

With many a weary step and many a groan,
Up the high hill he heaves a huge round stone;
The huge round stone, resulting with a bound,
Thunders impetuous down, and smokes along the ground.

Here there is no avowed imitation, but the sense is expressed in words which are specially selected for their suggestiveness.

So is it with music. The figure of the accompaniment to the ride in Berlioz' "Faust" is highly suggestive of the galloping of horses, and as the notes get slower, we seem to see the horses stopping. But this is not an exact imitation of the horses' feet, for the same notes are not preserved, but only the figure; and, in fact, as the horses stopped and got out of their stride, their feet would touch the ground faster instead of slower.

And from literature generally may be taken another illustration of an object which should be kept in view in musical composition.

One of the beauties of Macaulay's style is the skill with which he returns from a digression to his principal matter. Not only does the digression seem to arise naturally out of the subject; it also seems to return to it naturally, forming a sort of loop in the thread of the argument.

So it is with music. A digression must work back to the principal theme, and not jump back to it with an awkward sort of musical "but to return," or any other pleonasm.

Many points of resemblance between music and her sister arts may be recognised beyond those referred to above. The object in view has been to excite interest in the comparative study of art. The mind of a specialist is expanded by the knowledge of an art which operates through a medium different from his own. A painter may paint better pictures when he can appreciate the principles which governed Bach, Mozart, and Beethoven; a musician may compose better music when he has learned what may be learned at Assisi, in the Pitti Palace, or from the walls of our own National Gallery.

It is, happily, now not uncommon to see the first painters of the day in St. James's Hall: I hope that the first musicians of the day may be as frequently met within the walls of Burlington House. But merely to look at pictures and to listen to music is not enough; we must each go a little below the skin, and, though we may not be able to understand every anatomical nicety of the other's art, let us in each case learn something of the general skeleton.

Let knowledge grow from more to more,
But more of reverence in us dwell;
That mind and soul, according well,
May make one music as before,
But vaster.

THE GREAT COMPOSERS.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

No. XII.—ROSSINI (continued from page 75).

THE first performance of "Guillaume Tell" took place at the Opéra, on August 3, 1829, the principal artists being Nourrit (Arnold), Dabadie (Guillaume), Levasseur (Walter), Madame Damareau-Cinti (Mathilde), Madame Dabadie (Femmy), and Mdlle. Mori (Edwige). It would scarcely be interesting or valuable to reproduce here the critical notices which appeared in the French papers: We all know "Guillaume Tell" for ourselves—though it must be said that English representations for many years past have done it a gross injustice—and there is only need to state, for the sake of the fact, that the opinions of Parisian journalists were divided, a vast majority awarding praise. It was generally felt that the work suffered through its cumbersome libretto, and particularly from lack of dramatic interest after the famous meeting of the Cantons. This, however, did not abate the popularity of individual numbers. Soon all the town was talking of the overture, the duets in the first and second acts, the splendid trio, the choruses in act ii, and the Tyrolienne. A propos to this last, an anecdote appeared in a journal of the period. We give it for what it is worth :—

"A Mons. P., living at Boulogne-sur-Mer, was in possession of a musical library comprising a selection of the best French and other compositions, many of which are very little known. Rossini heard of this, and when engaged in the composition of 'Guillaume Tell' he applied to Mons. P. for any Swiss airs which he might have in his collection, as it was important to introduce a national air in the forthcoming opera. Shortly after, Mons. P. forwarded four airs, three of which were returned by Rossini as execrable. The fourth he kept, it being, as he said, redolent of the Helvetic mountains, and he used it accordingly for the Tyrolienne in the third act—with what success all who have heard the opera can testify. The cream of the history is, however, to come. After the triumph of 'Guillaume Tell,' and, in particular, of the Tyrolese air, the maestro received a letter from Boulogne, in which Mons. P., after multifarious excuses for his happy and innocent deception, humbly declared that he himself was the real author of this national Swiss air."

The sensation in Paris on the night of the first performance of "Guillaume Tell" was undoubtedly very great. This we can perfectly understand, for here was a composer, at thirty-seven, showing the most extraordinary adaptability as well as remarkable genius. There were many who questioned his power to write for the severer taste of the French public after so long delighting the more sensuous and less artistic preferences of his own countrymen. But the result discomfited all such expectations. Men could hardly believe their senses as the spectacle of Rossini soaring to the grand elevation of "Guillaume Tell" unfolded itself. The thing was alike a revolution and a surprise, and opened up a vista of possibilities which, unfortunately, was doomed to close again in disappointment. It has been well said :—

"The spectacle of a great master at the zenith of his glory and in the very prime of life thus breaking with all the traditions of his genius and appearing as in a second avatar is indeed a great and noble one. The sacrifice of all the means of effect by which his early popularity had been obtained is one which Rossini shares with Gluck and Weber, but which our former experience of his character would hardly have prepared us for. He seems at length to have discovered how antagonistic such effects were to the simplicity which was really at the base of the great musical revolution effected by him; but to discover and to act on a discovery are two different things, and he ought to have full credit for the courage and sincerity with which, at his age, he forsook the flowery plains in which his genius had formerly revelled for loftier and less accessible heights."

The first impulse of the Parisians was to award the credit here spoken of. At the close of the performance Habeneck conducted his musicians to Rossini's house on the Boulevard Montmartre, and, standing in the street, played the overture to the new masterpiece, in the presence of a great and representative crowd. "The people applauded," says one who was present, "so as to make the stones of the boulevard shake. They reached even a pitch of frenzy when Levasseur, Nourrit, and Dabadie thundered out the trio of the Oath.

Boieldieu, that musician of genius and heart, who also lodged at No. 10, went to Rossini's room and embraced him. Paer and Berton took an ice at the Café des Variétés, saying together, 'Art is lost.' To this Azevedo adds: "Rossini had been invited to supper with some friends. On returning with his convives, he found the neighbourhood of his residence blocked by an enormous crowd. The police and armed force were present, as was right, to preserve order. When the hero of the fête wished to pass he was prevented. He had to say, 'I am Rossini; they cannot begin without me. Let me pass.' To this the police answered, 'You Rossini! Be off, joker!' He then had to invoke the authority of a high functionary, who delivered him from trouble, after taking all needful precautions to assure himself of his identity."

"Guillaume Tell" was performed in its entirety fifty-six times; then three acts were given, and at last the second act only survived. What effect this treatment of his great work had upon the composer will appear a little later. There was, however, some consolation in selling the score to Troupenas for 24,000 francs, and also, perhaps, in receiving the red ribbon of the Legion of Honour.

At the climax of his glory and fame Rossini illustrated a frequent tendency of complex human nature—he began to think of his Italian home, and the poor old father who still survived. The ancient inspector of slaughter-houses and town trumpeter had visited his illustrious son at Paris in 1828, and spent several weeks with him, but, unable to accommodate himself to a new and strange life, soon returned to Bologna. Thither the master resolved to follow him, and find rest in the land of his birth from long years of wandering and work. He could well afford to do so. Having resigned his sinecure as inspector of singing in France, Rossini was free to leave that country, while an arrangement made with the Government set his mind at ease on the score of money matters. According to the treaty in question, he bound himself to compose exclusively for the Opéra during ten years, and once in two years to produce a new work for which the Civil List engaged to pay 15,000 francs. There was a further agreement that in case the Civil List desired to terminate the contract, Rossini should receive a retiring pension of 6,000 francs per annum. With a contented spirit, therefore, our master set out for Bologna, and in the society of his father, surrounded by familiar scenes, began to amuse himself as he well knew how. Azevedo tells us that, at intervals, he thought over a new opera on the subject of "Faust," having already studied Goethe's drama with that view, and drawn up a scenario. Years afterwards he was questioned by Ferdinand Hiller upon this matter, and made reply: "It was for a long period a favourite notion of mine, and I had already planned the whole scenario with Joly: it was naturally based upon Goethe's poem. At this time, however, there arose in Paris a regular 'Faust' mania; every theatre had a particular 'Faust' of its own, and this somewhat damped my ardour." There was, however, another and more potent reason for abandoning the idea of "Faust." July, 1830, came round bringing its famous "days"—those which saw that—even for a Bourbon—particularly stupid monarch, Charles Dix, driven from his throne. Rossini was not blind to the full significance of this revolution as regarded himself. The old order had changed, giving place to a new, and in the new, he vehemently suspected, there was no such thing as a pension of 6,000 francs. So, in November, the master, leaving his Italian retreat, went to Paris for the purpose of knowing the worst—perhaps of making it better. The worst, no doubt, was very bad indeed. Not only had the fabric of society been shaken to the end of a general displacement, but the Civil List, charged with Rossini's pension and rewards, was in liquidation, and the allowance to Louis Philippe did not permit of much liberality, even had that personage felt disposed to exercise it. Nor was this all. The Opéra had been put under the Minister of the Interior; Lubbert, Rossini's managerial friend, knew the place no more, and there was an end for good and all to the arrangement that the master should produce a work every two years. More disheartening circumstances could not be conceived, especially by Rossini, whose sanguine temperament had in view a kind of musical dictatorship for France, with himself as a very-well-off and comfortable dictator. Nevertheless, the master did not anticipate a long stay in Paris. He had all his life been able to use the words of Caesar's laconic despatch, and probably thought that his mere presence on the scene would suffice. For once, however, the spell of victory was broken, and, in all probability it is to the suspense and humiliation of Rossini's position through several succeeding years that we owe his resolve to write no more for the stage. This the composer did not foresee when, instead of taking an apartment for himself, he accepted the hospitality of his friend Severini, who, as a director of the Théâtre Italien—the present Opéra-Comique—lived beneath the roof of that edifice. Having settled down there he entered upon pourparlers with regard to his pension. Among the political personages whom he visited was M. Guizot; and in the "Memoirs pour servir à l'Histoire de mon Temps" that statesman records not only the fact but his impressions of the master. He says:—

"The same day M. Lenormant brought to breakfast with me M. Rossini, to whom the Revolution of July had caused some annoyances, which I wished to make him forget. King Charles X. had treated him with well-merited favour. He was inspector-general of singing, and received, in addition to his author's rights, a salary of seven thousand francs; and some months previously, after the brilliant success of "Guillaume Tell," the Civil List had signed a treaty with him by which he undertook to write two more great works for the French stage.† I wished the new Government to show him the same good will, and that he, in return, should give us the promised masterpieces. We talked freely, and I was struck by the animation and variety of his wit, open to all subjects, gay without vulgarity, and satirical without bitterness. He left me, after half an hour's agreeable conversation, but which led to nothing, for it was not long before I resigned. I remained with my wife, whom M. Rossini's person and conversation had much interested. My little girl Henrietta, who was just beginning to walk and to chatter, was brought into the room. My wife went to the piano and played some passages from the master who had just left us—from "Tancredi" amongst other works. We were alone; I passed I cannot say how long in this manner, forgetting all external occupations, listening to the piano, watching my little girl, who was trying to walk, perfectly tranquil and absorbed in contemplation of these objects of my affection."

Time passed, and the matter of the pension remained unsettled; indeed, there was a growing reluctance on the part of the authorities to enter upon its consideration. At length, nearly four years having been wasted in vain personal efforts, Rossini resolved to put the law in motion. Meanwhile, he had not wholly abandoned the pen of the composer for that of the suitor. In 1832 a Spanish gentleman, Don Varela, resident in Madrid, desired to possess a sacred work by Rossini, and to that end obtained the help of the composer's friend Aguado as an intermediary. Rossini consenting, six numbers of the "Stabat Mater" were finished before illness compelled the master to abandon it. An obstinate and painful attack of lumbago laid him completely aside, but, as Don Varela grew impatient, Rossini begged Signor Tadolini, singing-master at the Théâtre Italien, to complete the task. This Tadolini did, and the "Stabat" was forthwith despatched to Madrid, on a distinct understanding that the MS. should be retained in Varela's hands. In return Rossini was presented by the Spaniard with a diamond ring valued at 6,000 francs. Presently we shall hear of this work again, but now is the time to state that a Mass was arranged by the master from his operas in 1832, and that in 1834 he handed to Troupenas for publication a set of twelve drawing-room pieces, entitled "Soirées Musicales." Let us now return to the question of the pension, which dragged its length along like Pope's Alexandrine line.

Rossini's case came before the Court of First Instance on March 24, 1834; his counsel, M. Dupin, jeune, seeking to show that the decree conferring the pension was one of binding obligation upon the State. On the other hand, the Crown argued that the charge lay upon the Opéra, but could not convince the Court, which ordered that the liquidator of the old Civil List should pay Rossini all arrears, and continue the pension for the future. Against this decision the Crown appealed; the case coming on for further argument (February 14, 1835) before the First Chamber of the Royal Court of Paris. Previous to this date, it should be observed (April 8, 1834), a law had been passed removing all obligations incurred under the old Civil List from the official liquidator and transferring them to the Minister of Finance! It was, nevertheless, the liquidator who appealed. Objection being promptly made to his locus standi under the new law, the court held it to be fatal, and condemned the liquidator in costs. Rossini's troubles were not over even then. The Préfet of the Seine intervened, and the Council of State (July 16, 1835), for reasons urged by that functionary, set aside both the decision of the Court of First Instance and that of the Court of Appeal. It appeared then that the battle would have to be fought all over again, but, thanks, it is said, to the good offices of M. Thiers, the Government abandoned the fruits of its victory; Rossini receiving his arrears from July 1, 1830, and having his pension formally charged upon the Treasury.

"During the five mortal years," says Azevedo, "which this deplorable affair lasted, Rossini preserved a stoical countenance. The amenities of a fatiguing procedure; the nearly complete neglect of his French operas; the mutilation of his masterpiece; the complete destruction of the plan which he had conceived and, as far as circumstances allowed, so well realised for the complete musical conquest of our beautiful France—none of these things could draw a complaint, a bitter word, a protest from this man, whose character, to those able to estimate it, was as extraordinary at his genius. Once only Rossini revealed his thoughts, and that was by a mot spirituel. The director of the Opéra, meeting him on the Boulevard, said, in a tone intended to be pleasant, 'Well, maestro, you ought not to complain; the second act of "Guillaume Tell" is played this evening.' 'All of it?' asked Rossini, with the calmest air in the world."

* Vide "Life of Rossini," by Sutherland Edwards, pp. 320-30.

† It will be observed that these figures—7,000 francs and two works—differ from the figures already given on the authority of Azevedo and others.

There was now nothing to detain the master in Paris, and in November, 1836, he rejoined his aged father at Bologna, there resuming the life quitted five years before.

ENGLISH OPERA AND THE COMING SEASON.

ENGLISH Opera is about to enter a new phase of existence, the importance of which in the history of our music can scarcely be exaggerated. The most cursory survey of the fortunes of English Opera since the commencement of the century, will suffice to show that not only are we about to witness a new departure in our National opera, but one that in all probability will be memorable in our musical annals. Since 1809, when the son of Dr. Arnold opened the Lyceum as an English Opera house, many and curious have been the vicissitudes through which our opera has passed. At the Lyceum, as subsequently at Drury Lane, English Opera gave place frequently to Italian operas in English, as when Malibran sang at the latter house in English versions of "La Sonnambula," &c. With the appearance of Balfe and Wallace a reaction set in, and for many years native opera exhibited a renewed, but spasmodic, vitality. The production in 1834 of Barnett's "Mountain Sylph," and the successes scored by Sir Julius Benedict and Dr. Macfarren, may be mentioned as bright epochs in a chequered story. We have even witnessed the formation, and failure, of an English Opera Company, Limited. Yet, although a certain progressive movement may be detected in the artistic quality of the works produced during this long period, it will be generally conceded that at no time was our opera comparable to contemporary continental production. We need not now inquire into the causes of this mediocrity, nor how it has since come to pass that some of our living composers, such as Mr. Cowen and Mr. Villiers Stanford, have sought and found an audience for their works in other countries. With the last few years has developed among us a feeling for the higher class of music that is quite phenomenal. Through many and diverse agencies our dormant æsthetic sense has been made sensible. And this development of taste is, we believe, a veritable passion, nor are we over sanguine in thinking it extends to the department of dramatic music. The approaching season which Mr. Carl Rosa inaugurates at Drury Lane at Easter will be remarkable for the production for the first time of two operas by two English composers. Not many years ago a similar announcement would have awakened little interest and less hope. Another addition to the catalogue of Balfe's works, for instance, would scarcely have stirred the placidity of the musical world; its quality would have been easily anticipated; it was sure to be melodious after the fashion of its forerunners, undramatic in character, and Italian in form; while it was equally sure to present in its action absurdly inconsequential levities. Now, however, the old order of things is changed. It is no longer possible to present to the public, as new work in opera, anything composed on the old familiar lines, when a play of the loosest construction, and music that was purely incidental, betrayed, like an ill-assorted couple, their mutual weakness. The very word "opera" has acquired of late years a new and significant meaning. No one knows better than Mr. Carl Rosa that while the public demand novelty it is novelty that shall be representative of our time, and not resuscitative of the past; it is essential for success that new work in opera should possess the quality of modernité. Now or never will it be determined whether we are a musical people in the broadest sense of the phrase, and whether our appreciation of English opera extends beyond a taste for operettas in which musical bouffonneries and ephemeral pleasantries are the mighty attractions.

Of these two forthcoming English operas to which we have alluded, one is the composition of Mr. A. C. Mackenzie, while Mr. Goring Thomas is the author of the other. Mr. Mackenzie's "Colomba" is founded on a libretto written by Mr. Hueffer on one of Prosper Mérimée's most brilliant romances. With so excellent a subject for dramatic treatment there is reason to hope that "Colomba" will prove an addition to the successful operas, the dramas of which have been drawn from the source that inspired Herold's "Pré-aux-Clercs," and Bizet's "Carmen." Although still young, Mr. Mackenzie is already favourably known by his Cantata "The Bride," and still more by his "Jason," which lately met with so distinguished a success at Bristol—a work remarkable in many ways, but above all for the serious, conscientious spirit in which the composer has realised a lofty conception. The striking individuality of the music of "Jason" is of happy augury for "Colomba." Those who are acquainted with Mr. Mackenzie's works have the right to entertain high expectations of his opera. Not only has he had the advantage of a course of training in all branches of music, such as would be considered severe even in these days, but he has, in the thorough spirit of an artist, made himself acquainted with all the resources of the modern orchestra, so as to be able to command those resources. While in Germany, and when quite a youth, he took his place in the orchestra to share the responsibilities in the execution of such works as "Lohengrin" and "Tannhäuser." He is thus enabled to put into practice the acquirements of a varied and invaluable experience, and to graft this important knowledge on his natural gifts, his fluent invention, and his well-known and remarkable genius for melody. Hence it may be inferred with certainty that "Colomba" is a dramatic opera, not a lyrical play in which the numbers of the score are incidental and susceptible of a natural detachment from the context, and that it in no sense repeats the traditions of past English opera, but illustrates, in thoroughly modern spirit, the unassailable theories of Gluck. It will be seen, for instance, in "Colomba," that the proprieties of the drama are respected, and their sweet reasonableness never outraged; that the leit-motif is used as Weber and Wagner (in his early works) used and not abused it; and that the opera forms a homogeneous whole, even as the different parts of a symphony comprehend one controlling idea. One other matter in connection with "Colomba" calls for notice, for it is an innovation. The spoken dialogue which has hitherto obtained in English opera, as in opéra comique and in German opera, gives place in Mr. Mackenzie's work to an accompanied recitative. This will not be received with satisfaction by those who still hold the old-fashioned and, we believe, wholly fallacious notion that our language does not lend itself to this form of rhythmical expression. It remains to be seen if Mr. Mackenzie has not taken a step towards the abolition of what appears to us to be a painful and ludicrous incongruity in our opera.

The second new English Opera which Mr. Carl Rosa is about to produce is Mr. Goring Thomas's "Esmeralda." The libretto, we understand, is based upon one written by M. Victor Hugo, on his popular romance "Notre Dame de Paris." It is arranged by Signor Randegger, with the translation by Mr.

Marzials, who had made some additions in verse of his own. Some of the reasons we have already given for anticipating in "Colomba," a work worthy of the purer æsthetics of our age, animate our expectation of "Esmeralda." Indeed, the acceptance of these works by Mr. Carl Rosa should be a guarantee that they possess the distinguishing qualities we have indicated, and their production must mark an era in the history of English Opera. The success of Mr. Carl Rosa's spirited enterprise being premised, there arises a question of the deepest interest to all English musicians—a question that concerns all who honour the music of their country, and who regard hopefully the brightening future. We learn on the highest authority that in Germany, at the present time, there exists an absolute dearth of dramatic music of the highest quality, while productions of mediocrity abound. In Italy also, as Signor Filippi has recently testified, the works of foreigners, chiefly, are hailed with acclamation, and—if we except Ponchielli and the fastidious genius of Boito—mediocrity is paramount. In France alone is found a school of exuberant vitality and of marked individuality. It is only natural while confronting these facts to admit the possibility—nay, the imminent probability—of the reversal of the old order of things, and of seeing the productions of our rising school of dramatic composition obtain a hearing on the continent. The excursions of English opera across the channel have, it is true, been hitherto but May-day flights, but the history of the past should not, in the face of these signs of the times, make us despondent. It is because the present outlook amply justifies us, and in no mere sanguine spirit, that we entertain this view of our future: our art-country is no longer an island and never again can be; and all things are combining to make even this possible—that English dramatic music may obtain a hearing elsewhere, as here.

In a recent number of the Archivio Musicale the editors have very politely inserted an elaborate article apologising for the expression, "England the unmusical, by Antonomasia." In a former number of the Neapolitan periodical the words quoted seem to have slipped from the pen of one of the contributors, and the editors admit the irrelevancy of the expression as applied to a country in which so much music is heard, and where the best composers have found patronage, and some of them a home. The article we refer to is too long to reproduce, and too well reasoned and methodical to be condensed. The gist of it is, that the writer is not disposed to pay so much attention to political and religious causes as others claim for them, in accounting for the comparative scarcity of great composers and musical artists in this country. He acknowledges, as we all do, the exceeding difficulty of the subject, but seems inclined to attribute something in the question to the mental constitution and temperament of the English people, and a great deal to their geographical isolation, which has engendered a sort of moral isolation, and that peculiarity in manners and habits which the English preserve ostentatiously, as the writer says, "in London or Quebec, Freetown, Calcutta, or Sydney." This insularity, he argues, is opposed to the principal excellence of music, which resides in its universality. For, as he says, even in Italy, when people lived in castles and walled towns, music was of small account, and afterwards developed only with the gradual development of society itself. He seems to think that in England, had the nation been highly gifted with a sense of music, the art would have asserted itself, in spite of Puritanism or any other external cause. In a sulphate of iron, as he says, the iron—or the original purity and quality of the base—must count for something. He would doubtless admit, at the same time, that the method, the accidents and conditions of the combination, must also affect the ultimate result. The subject is very abstruse, but is philosophically treated in the Archivio of December 17th; and we draw the attention of our readers to the article. We feel inclined to remind the editors of the Archivio Musicale, which treats musical subjects in a broad as well as kindly and courteous spirit, that, as for the English, we abound in self-esteem; and our insularity has contributed to the growth of an armour that makes us impervious even to abuse, and much more to a well-meant delicate and skilful vivisection of our small failings. Should it please the Archivio to return at any time to the subject, we feel confident the English will only be too glad to allow it to cut and slash in its own way, without apologising afterwards or to begin with. We have been taught in our grammars to learn from our enemies; and with more reason shall we be pleased to learn from so cultivated a friend as the Archivio.

SINCE our last number appeared a conspicuous Welsh musician has passed away in the person of Mr. John Owen, of Chester, better known all over the Principality as Owain Alaw—his bardic cognomen. We are not aware of the exact position occupied by Mr. Owen among the professors of the border town in which he resided for many years. On the other hand, we do know that hardly an Eisteddfod of any importance was held in North and Mid Wales without his co-operation either as "conductor" or as adjudicator. In both capacities he did excellent service, while he was always available for a song or a speech. An Eisteddfod conductor, it may be well to add, does not necessarily imply a musician, but a kind of acting chairman, put up to relieve the ornamental person nominally presiding from duties he could not discharge. The conductor needs to be a man of ready wit and fluent speech, resolute of purpose and able to keep his temper. In these respects Mr. Owen was qualified, and his death will be felt as a severe loss. Most of the gentlemen conspicuous on the Eisteddfod platform fifteen or twenty years ago have now left it through age or death, and a new generation has arisen with larger views. Hence the old institution is coming up with the times, and promising to do more and better than minister to small vanities and narrow tastes. Next August the National meeting will be held in Cardiff, where arrangements as regards competitions, prizes, &c., are already complete. They seem to us comprehensive and liberal enough to satisfy the most exigent, the first prize in choral singing for example, being £100 and a gold medal. It is worthy of note that out of six musical adjudicators, four—Professor Macfarren, Mr. Barnby, Mr. Turpin, and Mr. Joseph Bennett—are Englishmen; the two Welshmen being Mr. Emlyn Evans and Mr. Jenkins, Mus. Bac. If these gentlemen agree to withhold prizes in cases where none of the competitors show adequate merit they will do good service to an institution that hitherto has not worked by a sufficiently high standard.

WE have on several occasions drawn attention to the small honour paid to the great composers of the world by the English people, although it is true that we have been reminded of a "Beethoven Laundry" by seeing these words painted upon a cart, and have been told that a "Beethoven Street" can be discovered by any musical pilgrim who will take the trouble to find it. But where can we point to a statue, exhibited in a public promenade, of any of the great men in musical art who can claim England as the land of their birth? That other countries are not so apathetic in their recollections of native musicians who have shed a lustre upon the art has been fully proved by the numerous testimonials to their genius which abound in their crowded thoroughfares; and we have now an instance that Italy is about to add one more to these national tributes. In a contemporary we read that "Signor Jerace, the young Neapolitan sculptor, who has already made himself a name in Italy, has been commissioned with a statue to the composer Bellini, to be erected in Naples. The monument will represent Bellini with the Muse. There will be four bas-reliefs, representing 'Norma,' the 'Sonnambula,' personages from the 'Puritani,' and either a scene from the 'Pirate,' 'Beatrice di Tendo,' or 'Romeo and Juliet.' The pedestal will be in the Greek style." Italians then will be reminded by this national monument not only that their country has received a valuable legacy from one born on their own soil, but that they know how to honour the donor. May we hope for the time when having paid due respect to politicians and warriors—we shall begin to recollect that England has produced some noble workers in the peaceful art of music?

THE kindly feeling evinced on all occasions by executive musicians towards their fellow artists has been so often practically manifested by readily offering their services to those who, through ill-health or necessitous circumstances, have been compelled to seek such gratuitous aid that we have almost come to regard music as a symbol of sympathy, which has the effect of banding its professors into a sort of masonic fraternity. Let it be remembered, however, that those who create music have equally shown their readiness to benefit the followers of their art, in proof of which—although instances might be easily multiplied—we may mention that Handel bequeathed a handsome legacy to the Royal Society of Musicians, and that Rossini left a large sum for the foundation of a Conservatorio in his native town, Pesaro. But we have now to speak of a celebrated composer who has not limited his charitable efforts to the benefit of musical artists, but has generously sought to relieve the miseries of all the poor around him. At Busseto, we read in a contemporary, Verdi is now building, at his own cost, a hospital in the neighbourhood of his villa, Santa Agatha, which it is hoped will be ready for use early in the summer of next year. He has been incited to this act of benevolence by finding that his poor neighbours were compelled to carry their sick on a waggon all the way to the nearest Piacentine hospital, often to the great pain and danger of the invalid; and not only it is said, has he undertaken to defray the entire expense of the building, but he intends to furnish it completely, and to provide it with at least the beginning of an endowment. The many admirers of Verdi's works will, we are certain, be gratified to find that a portion of the fortune he has amassed by his contributions to the world's intellectual enjoyment has been so nobly spent in the endeavour to alleviate physical suffering.

We are glad to find that a noble effort has been made in the French Senate by M. Schœlcher (the biographer of Handel) to obtain an expression of opinion in favour of continuing the State subsidy to the Cathedral choirs of France, which had been rejected by the Chamber of Deputies. Pleading his cause on the ground that the maintenance of the Cathedral foundations preserved "the magnificent traditions of plain song," which he said was an excellent scientific basis for the study of music, he pointed out that the withdrawal of this grant would prevent the performance of Oratorios in French Cathedrals, and thus the great masterpieces of sacred music would be virtually banished from France. Warming with his subject, he boldly asked, "In what other places besides the Cathedrals could be heard the sublime Masses of Beethoven and the grandiose Requiem of Mozart?" M. Schœlcher's appeal, we are told, took the clerical party by surprise, and produced a deep impression. As he was careful to inform the Senate that he had just consulted M. Gounod and M. Ambrose Thomas on the matter, it is clear that he has resolved to enlist the sympathies of the recognised musical artists of France in the movement; and it is unlikely, therefore, that the subject will be allowed to drop. That sacred music will shortly be heard by all classes with more sincere devotional feeling in a sacred than a secular building is a fact beyond dispute, even in countries where the great works of the great masters have encountered some opposition on their entrance to their legitimate home; and it is gratifying, therefore, to read that M. Schœlcher's proposition was rejected by a majority of only two votes, for it virtually proves that eventually the services of so powerful an ally as France in the good cause will not be withheld.

THE fifth annual Report of the Orphan School and Benevolent Fund for Musicians, organised and for many years carried on in Bath, by Miss Helen Kenway, is deserving of consideration as evidencing how, with a small amount of support, this charitable lady has been working for the means of educating the children of musical artists left destitute by the decease of their father, and also for the relief of those members of the profession who are totally incapacitated from earning the means of living. It is much to the credit of Miss Kenway that, so far from being actuated by any desire to place herself in opposition to the Royal Society of Musicians, she has ever acknowledged the excellence of this institution, and endeavoured, indeed, to supplement its usefulness by assisting those who, having neglected to become members, had no claim upon its funds. It is announced that there are many orphans anxiously waiting for admission to a school; and, if sufficient funds can be procured, Miss Kenway is desirous of taking a house for educational purposes, and devoting herself entirely to its management. The Report includes a list of those who have been benefitted by this Fund; and names and further details will be furnished on application to Miss Helen Kenway, South Hill House, South Lyncombe, Bath. We cannot too earnestly advise all musical artists to join the Royal Society of Musicians at an early age; but meanwhile let us not forget to bestow a hearty meed of praise for the untiring efforts of one whose only reward can be the consciousness of having done good.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

THE exhaustless popularity of "The Messiah" was once more evinced on Ash Wednesday, when an audience of nearly 7,000 persons assembled, though the work had been given only five weeks previously in the same locale and by the same Society. The choruses were as usual splendidly sung under the masterly direction of Mr. Barnby, and "For unto us" was loudly encored. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington sang the soprano airs in her customary manner, those for contralto were perfectly rendered by Madame Patey, and the fine voice of Mr. Maas told well in the tenor solos. Mr. Frederic King could not appear in consequence of indisposition, and his place was taken at very short notice by Mr. Kempton, whose efforts under the circumstances should not be subjected to criticism.

Beethoven's colossal Missa Solemnis in D was announced to be given, for the first time, in the Albert Hall, on the 21st ult., but the performance was postponed in consequence of insufficient time for preparation, and the "Lobgesang" and "Stabat Mater" were substituted. The wisdom of this course cannot be denied. Beethoven's Mass is the most crucial test of merit to which the Albert Hall choir could be subjected, and a faulty rendering would be very damaging to its reputation. Musicians may therefore look forward with the greater confidence to a splendid interpretation of the great work when Mr. Barnby deems it to have been properly rehearsed. The familiar music of Mendelssohn and Rossini of course offered no difficulty to the choir, and the solos were well rendered by Miss Anna Williams, Miss M. Fenna, Miss Orridge, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. F. King, the lady last named appearing in the stead of Madame Patey, for whom an apology was made. The soloists were most successful, and a determined effort was made to encore the "Cujus animam" and "Quis est homo." Prior to the "Stabat Mater," Wagner's Funeral March from "Götterdämmerung" was impressively played by the orchestra, the audience rising in acknowledgment of this mark of respect to the deceased composer.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

ON Friday evening (23rd ult.) the Society which has adopted the name and proposes to carry on the work of the institution so recently dissolved after fifty years' service, gave its first Concert in St. James's Hall. Our readers are doubtless familiar with the manner in which this heir to labour and renown arose, and they must be no less acquainted with its constitution and method of working. On these matters, consequently, we need not enlarge, it being more to the purpose to extend a hearty welcome to the Society, and wish it "long continuance and increasing." We are not disposed to look critically at new labourers in the field of art. There is something for all to do, and the only qualifications required are earnestness and ability. These the latest comers seem to possess; and we the more rejoice in its presence because the department of oratorio is not crowded with workers.

Excellent choice was made of a programme for the opening Concert. The Society wisely means to keep acknowledged masterpieces before the public, but has, no less sensibly, resolved to present from time to time such novelties as deserve the honour. This is true conservatism—in other words, the conservatism which guards what is precious in the public store and, at the same time, seeks to increase its wealth. Gounod's "Redemption" could not be overlooked by any society acting in such a spirit. It was the first thing, probably, to which the directors turned their attention, and now we have to say that they reaped a harvest of reward, the attendance on Friday evening being overwhelmingly large and made up of just those persons whose favour a new society should desire. All possible distinction attended the début and enlisted more interest and favour than could have been gained under any other conditions. A qualifying remark has, however, to be made, for there was a "little rift within the lute." In the first place, some of the artists engaged—we need not mention names—were scarcely of sufficient rank and qualifications for a performance of great moment. Secondly, the orchestra proved lacking in the finish and precision absolutely demanded by a work in which its importance is so great. Thirdly, the Conductor, Mr. Charles Hallé, exercised a discretion as to the "reading" of several numbers, against which it would be easy to show good cause. These were certainly drawbacks, but we are not disposed to dwell upon them in the case of a first essay. Under the actual conditions much is excusable that, presently, will call for sterner treatment. We pass on, therefore, to circumstances upon which congratulation may fairly be offered. The Society's chorus is very good indeed, thanks to the great skill and untiring exertions of Mr. W. H. Cummings, its trainer. Mr. Cummings is evidently the right man in the right place, and we can only hope that even greater responsibilities and larger duties will devolve upon him in connection with the Society. The "Redemption" choruses were admirably sung, every nuance being observed with unity of purpose and effect, while the words were enunciated with remarkable clearness, and the spirit of the various situations reflected in the expression adopted. We have rarely heard choral singing more worthy of praise in respect of those higher qualities after which, in many cases, there is no such thing as striving at all. The soloists were Miss Mary Davies, Miss Santley, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Guy, and Mr. Santley, some at least of whom were adequate to the task imposed upon them. In this department, however, perfect satisfaction was not given, though shortcomings appeared to have but slight effect upon the enjoyment of the audience, by whom the beautiful and impressive music was heard with deep interest and sustained attention.

BACH CHOIR.

ON the 1st ult., in St. James's Hall, this choir began the labours of a new season by giving a Concert, without orchestra, conducted by Dr. Stainer, Mr. Otto Goldschmidt being necessarily absent. A better locum tenens than the Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral could hardly have been found, and it is regrettable that the choir did not muster in full force to do him honour. Saying this, we assume, of course, that there has been no numerical falling off in membership, since we should be compelled to regard that as even a worse sign than a temporary abatement of enthusiasm. One thing is perfectly clear—the choir failed on the occasion in question to show its old "form." Its singing was poor and inartistic by comparison with previous doings, and the fact was observed with general regret. We cannot afford to lose the Bach Choir. It has done good service where good service was wanted, and the need for its existence continues. Several works of interest were in the programme of the 1st ult., among them the Psalm "Jehovah quam multi sunt"—that fine example of our greatest English master, Henry Purcell. It was performed with an organ accompaniment, written from the figured bass by Mr. W. H. Cummings, and made a lively impression by means of combined dignity and beauty. The choir, we trust, will draw further upon the works of Purcell, who is admired most by those who know him best. Another interesting feature was an Anthem, "The God of Jeshurun," left unfinished by Sir John Goss at his death, and since completed by Mr. Arthur Sullivan. Our first duty is to congratulate Mr. Sullivan upon the happy result of a delicate task—one in the performance of which nothing can be easier than to make a mistake. He has taken up the Anthem where Sir John Goss put it down, and continued it not only in the form but in the spirit of his old master, so that it would be hard for even a connoisseur to say where the two pens meet. We have, therefore, a notable addition to the repertory of English Church music, and one honourable to both composers. This will be perfectly understood when we state that Goss took special pains with his section of the work, and fully intended it to rank among his masterpieces. The Motett "I wrestle and pray," attributed in the programme to J. C. Bach, and Palestrina's "Missa Papæ Marcelli," were also conspicuous; the last-named work being heard a second time with lively interest. Upon the miscellaneous madrigals, &c., forming the second part there is no need to dwell. The solo vocalists were Miss Robertson, Madame Fasset, and Mr. Kenningham. Madame Néruda also appeared and delighted the audience by the finished art of her violin solos.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE Saturday afternoon Concerts were resumed on the 10th ult., Mr. Manns having returned for the purpose from Glasgow, where he had left several members of his band. In spite of this drawback, however, the orchestral performances were free from fear or reproach, and an excellent rendering, inter alia, of Beethoven's C minor Symphony was given. The only feature of the Concert which calls for permanent record was a new Piano-forte Concerto by Henry Litolfi. Our excellent friend "G," having for once indulged in the weakness from which even good Homer is said not to have been entirely free, had set down in the programme the third of the "Symphonic Concerti" by the Germano-Franco-English composer. No. 5, in C minor, was in reality played by M. Breitner. The work is a very favourable specimen of Litoff's style. Although designed with a view to technical display, it by no means sacrifices the higher aims of genuine artistic expression to that purpose. There is a certain breadth about the themes and their treatment which atones to a great extent for the absence of genuine invention. Of the four divisions of the Concerto we prefer the slow movement, although the difference between it and the others is one of degree rather than of essence. Altogether the work does credit to its composer, who, although not a master of the first order, is well worthy of an occasional hearing. M. Breitner, the interpreter, a pupil of Rubinstein, is a pianist of the impressionist school. His style is very vigorous, but his touch is hard and without poetry. The second and last Concert which falls under our notice at present (17th ult.) was conducted by Mr. Prout, whose new Cantata, "Alfred" (words by Mr. W. Grist), formed the chief item of the programme. The work, we fear, has little chance of permanent vitality, and detailed notice would therefore serve no purpose. It is, however, not without a certain historic interest, and may, indeed, be classed amongst the curiosities of modern music. Mr. Prout as a critic is, we believe, amongst the advocates of the so-called "advanced" school of German art; but as a composer he keeps entirely aloof from the doctrines inculcated by that school. His music is such as might well have been written thirty or forty years ago, before Brahms had been "discovered" by Schumann, and before a note of that master or of Wagner had been heard, or at least intelligently and appreciatively heard, in this country. Any attempt at dramatic characterisation is all but absent; the choruses are well written, but have little to do with the action, and there is something positively touching about the naïve simplicity with which the declamatory music is treated. The Borough of Hackney Choral Society showed to great advantage in the choral portions of the work, and the soli were adequately rendered by Miss Marriott, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Bridson. A very interesting feature of the same Concert was the selection from Mozart's music to "King Thamos," for the revival of which thanks are due to Mr. Prout.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

We have still briefly at least to refer to the two Concerts held on January 27th and 29th respectively, the former having been provided with a special programme consisting exclusively of works by Mozart (in commemoration of the 127th anniversary of the birth of that classical master of the art), with Madame Norman-Néruda and Mr. Charles Hallé as the leading interpreters; while the latter (evening) Concert presented no novel feature, except for the first appearance at this institution of Madame Frickenhaus, as the pianist, who made a decided mark in her performance of Schumann's "Faschingschwank," which was loudly encored; Madame Norman-Néruda was again the leading violinist, and Mr. Santley the vocalist.

The first (afternoon) Concert of the past month (3rd ult.) opened with Mendelssohn's String Quartet in E flat (Op. 12) and concluded with Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in D (Op. 70, No. 1), both old, but none the less highly valued friends in the répertoire of the Popular Concerts, respecting which, however, it will suffice to mention the names of the executants—viz., in the Quartet Madame Norman-Néruda, MM. Ries, Straus, and Piatti, and in the Trio Mr. Charles Hallé, supported by the lady violinist and Signor Piatti. As his solo piece Mr. Hallé chose Weber's Pianoforte Sonata in C major (Op. 24), a choice the more meritorious since, of late years, the pianoforte works by that master have been most unaccountably neglected, albeit that they (and his Grand Sonatas more especially) offer full scope for the display of executive skill in combination with high intrinsic worth. The bright and joyous work in question, however, is the one which has been most frequently produced at this institution. It was rendered con amore by the pianist, who was greatly applauded. Madame Norman-Néruda, in conjunction with the pianist of the evening, played in her best manner Handel's Violin Sonata in D major (with pianoforte accompaniment). Miss Thudichum, who was the vocalist, contributed to a programme which may be called strictly classical Pergolesi's song "Ogni pena" and Beethoven's "Kennst du das Land," in both of which she displayed good taste and faultless execution.

On the following Monday (the 5th ult.) the programme introduced several numbers which had not been previously performed—viz., String Quartet in E flat (Op. 58, No. 1), by Spohr (Madame Norman-Néruda, MM. Ries, Straus, and Piatti); Variations for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello in E flat (Op. 44), by Beethoven (Madame Norman-Néruda, MM. Hallé and Piatti); and Waltzes in C sharp minor and D flat (Op. 64) by Chopin (Mr. Charles Hallé). That the Quartet should not have been heard here before is scarcely matter for surprise, considering the number of similar works which have emanated from the pen of its prolific author. It is, however, a good specimen of Spohr's style, while not free from some of his mannerism, the Adagio more especially being a movement of great melodious beauty and excellent workmanship. Beethoven's Variations (fourteen in number) belong to the composer's earlier manner, when he was still under the spell of Mozart and Haydn's influence, and were capably rendered on this occasion. Mr. Hallé gained well-merited applause for his performance of Chopin's Waltzes, to which he added a Nocturne and Impromptu by the same composer, the latter in response to the inevitable encore. Brahms's Sonata in G major (Op. 78) for pianoforte and violin, was likewise included in the evening's proceedings. We have repeatedly spoken of this work in these columns, and it will therefore suffice to add that the executants on the present occasion were Madame Norman-Néruda and Mr. Charles Hallé. Miss Carlotta Elliot contributed songs by Schubert and Robert Franz to the satisfaction of the audience. At the afternoon Concert of the same week (the 10th ult.) Madame Frickenhaus was again the pianist, and gave as her solo performance Beethoven's Sonata in D minor (Op. 31, No. 2), in which she obtained the customary encore—encores after masterpieces of this order being especially objectionable, even though, as in the present instance, they should consist of a Nocturne by Schumann. Mr. Henry Holmes led with great ability Haydn's String Quartet in B flat (Op. 55, No. 3), supported by MM. Ries, Holländer, and Piatti, and was also associated with Madame Frickenhaus and Signor Piatti in Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in E flat (Op. 70, No. 2), the companion of the Trio produced here on the previous Saturday, both having been dedicated by the composer to Count Erdödy. Signor Piatti played in his well-known masterly manner an Allemande, Largo and Allegro by Veracini, and Mr. Santley delighted his audience in songs by Gounod, Schubert and Schumann, both artists having to pay the usual tribute of an encore.

Mlle. Marie Krebs made her first appearance this season on the succeeding Monday evening (the 12th ult.), and was accorded the warm greeting reserved for the special favourites at this institution. The gifted pianist performed with much effect Bach's Prelude and Fugue à la Tarantella in A minor, to which she added, as an encore, Beethoven's Polonaise in C, besides playing the pianoforte part in Schumann's Trio in F (Op. 80) assisted by Mr. H. Holmes and Signor Piatti. The violinist just mentioned was again an able leader in Schubert's String Quartet in D minor (Op. 161), and achieved a marked success in his rendering of a Ballade by the late Alfred Holmes (his brother) and of the Scherzo in D (Op. 135) by Spohr, a very graceful movement. Airs by Mozart and Handel were expressively rendered by Miss Cravino. The following was the programme at the Saturday Concert of the same week (the 17th ult.) viz.: Spohr's String Quartet in E flat (Op. 58, No. 1, second performance this season); Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor, Mozart's Sonata in B flat (No. 10) and two Etudes for pianoforte solo by Mendelssohn—executants, Madame Norman-Néruda, Mlle. Marie Krebs, MM. Ries, Holländer, and Piatti; vocalist, Miss Santley.

The evening Concert of the 19th ult. presented a novelty in the Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello, in D minor (Op. 12), by Herr Gernsheim, one of the more gifted disciples of the "New German" school, whose Pianoforte Quartet (Op. 6) and Trio (Op. 28), have already been accorded a favourable reception at these Concerts. The present Sonata confirmed, if it did not enhance, the previously conceived estimate of the composer's talent. It is pleasing enough, of its kind, and is, mirabile dictu, not afflicted with the over-elaboration, and undue prolongation of trite themes, which too often form the leading characteristics of the school to which it belongs. It consists of three movements only—viz., an Andante con moto, an Allegretto (with a vivo e giocoso, in place of a Trio) in F major, and a final Allegro con brio, in the tonic major—and was done full justice to on the part of Miss Agnes Zimmermann and Signor Piatti. The gifted lady pianist, who has just returned from a most successful continental concert tour, gave as her solo performance the late Sir Sterndale Bennett's three musical sketches, entitled respectively "The Lake," "The Millstream," and "The Fountain," with her accustomed brilliancy and artistic refinement, being also associated with Madame Norman-Néruda and Signor Piatti in a capital rendering of Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Trio in D minor (Op. 49), the present having been the twenty-fifth performance of this magnificent work at this institution. The Concert opened with Spohr's String Quartet in E minor (Op. 45, No. 2) the executants being the lady violinist just mentioned and MM. Ries, Holländer, and Piatti. Miss Thudichum was again a very efficient vocalist, although her enunciation in songs by Schubert, Lassen, and Paradies might have been more distinct—a fault which, however, the lady shares in common with many other vocalists of the present day.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE first Concert of the season was given on the 15th ult., at St. James's Hall, before a large audience. The purely orchestral works were Sterndale Bennett's Overture, "The Naiads," the Introduction to Wagner's "Parsifal," Mendelssohn's "Scotch Symphony," and Berlioz's Orchestral arrangement of Weber's "Invitation to the Waltz," a selection which calls for but little criticism save on the performance, many portions of which—especially Bennett's fanciful Overture—were hardly up to the standard which we should like to see preserved by this time-honoured Society. A graceful tribute to the memory of Herr Wagner was the interpolation of the Dead March in "Saul," which was received by the audience with a reverence due to his genius, the "Parsifal" prelude being also in true sympathy with the solemnity of the occasion. The programme included the Chorus of Dervishes, Turkish March, and March and Chorus from Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens"—the choral portion of which evinced the want of due preparation—and Beethoven's Choral Fantasia, the pianoforte part by Madame Sophie Menter, who, however, seemed more sympathetic with the music of Liszt—an Etude in D flat—which she played in the second part. The vocalists were Miss Santley, who sang charmingly Mozart's "Zeffiretti lusinghieri," and Mr. Frederic King, who, however, made but little of Gounod's "Le Villon," apparently from indisposition. Mr. W. G. Cousins was, as usual, the Conductor.

HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.

ALL lovers of music will be pleased to observe the above heading once more among concert notices, and as all well that ends well, no more need be said concerning the ill-advised disbandment of a celebrated musical organisation. Mr. Henry Leslie gives his name as president of the re-formed choir, and has presented it with the extensive library of music collected during twenty-five years' work, with the justifiable stipulation that the property shall revert to him should the Society cease to exist. Mr. Alberto Randegger assumed the direction of affairs early last year, and a trial Concert was given on July 4. This season four Concerts are to be given, of which the first took place on Thursday, the 22nd ult. It was quickly manifest that the brief interregnum had worked no mischief in the quality of the choir. There has been a moderate infusion of new blood, and something more might be done in this direction with regard to the sopranos; but, making allowance for a slight relative weakness in this department, the part-singing last Thursday was remarkable for magnificent tone, perfect intonation and exquisite refinement. Among the most effective performances of the evening were the motett, "I wrestle and pray," attributed to John Christopher Bach; Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm, and Weelkes's madrigal "As Vesta was." Schubert's lovely setting for female voices of the 23rd Psalm was marred by an unauthorised organ accompaniment. The programme included three new choral pieces, namely a sacred part-song, "The Mighty Caravan," by Mr. Josiah Booth; a secular part-song, "How sweet the moonlight," by Mr. J. G. Callcott; and an "O Salutaris," by Mr. F. Westlake—the last-named composition being received with considerable favour, due to its musicianly qualities and expressive style. Mr. Santley's rendering of Gounod's "Nazareth" was of course an immense popular success, and the admirable vocalist was in splendid voice; but the most interesting of the solo items was a new song entitled "My soul is an enchanted boat," by Miss Maude Valérie White. This clever young musician always evinces praiseworthy ambition in her selection of words, and she has not misjudged her capacity in the choice of Shelley's beautiful verses. If the voice part is slightly monotonous, the accompaniment is exceedingly happy in effect, and, as rendered by Miss Santley, the song proved very much to the taste of the audience.

MR. GEAUSSENT'S CHOIR.

THIS new musical association gave its second and last Concert for the present season at St. James's Hall on Tuesday, the 6th ult. It takes some time to convince the London public of the merits of any new undertaking, and Mr. Geaussent must not feel discouraged by the sparse audiences which have hitherto responded to his invitations. He has an exceedingly fine body of youthful voices at his command, and success will come if he knows how to wait for it and to labour unceasingly to earn it. As on previous occasions, it was in the smaller pieces that the excellence of his training was most discernable. Part-songs by Leslie, Benedict, W. Macfarren, and Pinsuti were sung with spirit and refinement, and there was not much to blame in the rendering of Mendelssohn's "98th Psalm" and Mr. Hecht's ambitious setting of "The Charge of the Light Brigade." The necessary relief to the part-music was provided by the solo efforts of Madame Trebelli and her concert party. One or two points may be noted in which some change may well be effected on future occasions. The programme of this Concert did not include one example of the genuine madrigalian school, which was an oversight. More inexplicable was the announcement that it was quite impossible to allow any encores, whereas every item that was asked for a second time was at once repeated. Either the rule should be observed or it should be abrogated.

ST. ANNE'S, SOHO.

IT was confidently expected that Mr. Barnby and the gentlemen who for years past have assisted him in connection with the Lenten musical services at St. Anne's would not let slip the opportunity presented by the great public interest in Gounod's "Redemption"—a work eminently fitted for use during the penitential season. The Oratorio is now being performed part by part, and attracts great crowds to Soho, where it can be heard to singular advantage, even though the executive means are not equal to such as we expect to find in concert-rooms. That "The Redemption" would be adopted by the Church was never in doubt. Its deep reverence, its absorbing regard for the sacred story as distinct from merely musical effect, and its power to impress the heart as well as the sense, make it eminently religious. We believe, therefore, that Gounod's Oratorio is destined to figure largely in the services of the Church; and in the effect produced at St. Anne's it is easy to recognise an earnest of this result.

With Mr. Barnby as Conductor there can be no question of an efficient performance. The orchestra numbers twenty-seven instruments, with Herr Pollitzer as leader, and Mr. Hodge presides at the organ. The Narrators are Mr. C. Wade (tenor) and Mr. Vaughan Edwards (bass); the part of the Saviour being taken by Mr. Fairfax Wade. Other soloists are Master Miller, Messrs. Grover, Cundy, and Orgill. These are all adequate to the work they have to do; the chorus is efficient, and the general musical result such as few would care to find fault with. We regret to add that the expenses are heavy and the collections light. This is unfair and inconsiderate on the part of the many who attend the services, and who, it appears, expect to be gratified and edified gratis. On such a matter, however, we need not enlarge. The duty of the congregation is too plain for words.

HAMPSTEAD CHORAL SOCIETY.

THE first Concert of the season, on the 5th ult., was one of the best yet given by this rising Society. The programme consisted of Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm ("As the hart pants") and Gade's Cantata, "Psyche," the excellent quality of the choir being most successfully tested in both works. In Mendelssohn's Psalm the principal singers were Miss Sinclair, Mr. M. Hanhart, Mr. Frazer, the Rev. A. N. With and Mr. George Gill, all of whom were thoroughly satisfactory. Gade's Cantata is rapidly growing into public favour, its reception on this occasion being indeed more enthusiastic than could have been anticipated, considering the absence of orchestral accompaniment. The solo vocalists—Miss Margaret Hoare, Miss Gertrude Hine, Miss Maud Jolliffe, Mr. Frazer, and Mr. D. S. Waterlow—gave the whole of their music with much dramatic effect, Miss Hoare winning warm and well-deserved applause in the many trying pieces which fell to her share. Mr. Willem Coenen—to whose talent and zeal the efficiency of the choir is due—besides acting as Conductor, played the Nocturne in F sharp and Polonaise in A flat of Chopin, and, being encored, gave Mendelssohn's Fantaisie in E minor, eliciting for each piece loud and spontaneous marks of approbation. A good word must be said for the judgment and skill displayed in the pianoforte accompaniments by Miss Amy Gill, especially those to Gade's work; the harmonium, at which Mr. H. M. Higgs ably presided, giving powerful aid to the effect throughout.

MUSIC IN-BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE past month has not been very fruitful in novelties here, and it must be confessed that some valuable musical opportunities have been wasted by the employment of first-class executive means on comparatively trivial or inferior work; yet, on the whole, the record for February is neither uninteresting nor uninteresting.

Whatever backslidings may be charged against other local musical organisations which are apt to prefer the loaves and fishes that wait on popular success to the barren satisfaction of the artistic conscience, the Festival Choral Society at all events is always true to its mission of instructing and elevating public taste not merely by meritorious execution, but also by judicious and high-class selection. The third Concert of the current subscription series, which took place in the Town Hall, on the 1st ult., was devoted to the very fantastic and dramatic setting of "Faust" by Hector Berlioz, which was first introduced here by the same musical body at their corresponding Concert last season. On that occasion public interest in the work was rather whetted than appeased, for the performance was a somewhat halting one, and the music was of far too novel and fanciful a character to be fairly fathomed at a single hearing. On this last occasion the performance, if not absolutely irreproachable, was at least an adequate and creditable one, and the large audience it attracted testified their appreciation of the entertainment by hearty and frequent applause. As abstract music, doubtless, Berlioz's dramatic legend is not to be weighed in the same scales with the works, say, of Beethoven and Mozart; but as a piece of graphic orchestral writing, or rather scene-painting, few things, either new or old, can compare with it in fancy, force, vividness and dramatic colour. Its characteristic charms were well brought out by the playing of the band, which had been specially reinforced for the occasion, and the famous Hungarian March, the graceful Ballet of Sylphs, and the awful ride to the abyss—not "course of the abyss," as Miss Hallé styles it in her too literal translation—were rendered with praiseworthy spirit, skill and precision. The chorus-singing generally was excellent, but wanting here and there in alertness and vivacity. Miss Mary Davies sustained the part of Margaret with intelligence and tenderness, and both in the "King of Thule" ballad and in the plaintive romance "Ah, me! my heart is heavy" revealed artistic qualities of a high order. Mr. Edward Lloyd responded creditably to the somewhat heavy demands made upon his vocal and dramatic powers by the part of Faust, and Mr. Ludwig contrived to invest the part of Mephistopheles with considerable force and individuality. Mr. Lander did justice to Brander's somewhat grim and ghastly lyric "The Poisoned Rat," and Mr. Stockley conducted with his accustomed care and skill.

The popular success of the month was Messrs. Harrison's Concert on the 5th ult., which was of a miscellaneous character, and furnished abundance of small opportunities for a goodly array of eminent artists, including Madame Marie Roze, Madame Trebelli, and others in the vocal department, and Madame Sophie Menter and M. Ovide Musin among the instrumentalists. Madame Menter's selection was calculated rather to display the phenomenal executive powers of the fair performer than her musical intelligence, and comprised the G flat Etude of Chopin, Liszt's difficult Fantasia on the skating music from "Le Prophète," Mendelssohn's Spinnlied, and a Minuet-valse in C minor by Henri Ketten. Of the admirable manner in which these pieces were rendered it would be superfluous to speak. M. Musin created a marked effect by his masterly performance of Paganini's fourth String Fantasia on the Prayer from "Moses in Egypt," and delighted all sections of the audience by his playing, with Mr. Ganz, of the Adagio and Rondo from Dussek's familiar Sonata-duet in B flat. In responding to a re-demand of Leonard's tuneful "Souvenir de Baden-Baden," M. Musin played a Cavatina by Joachim Raff. Madame Marie Roze was especially effective in the Verdi Scena "Tacea la notte," and Madame Trebelli was highly successful in Gounod's Serenade "Quand tu chantes," to which M. Musin contributed the needful obligato.

Profusion and variety were the distinguishing features of the third Concert of the Birmingham Philharmonic Union, which took place in the Town Hall on the 15th ult. The Society's choir was joined on this occasion by two vocalists, Miss Marian McKenzie and Mr. Maas, the other principal performers being Mr. T. M. Abbott (violin and viola), Mr. Nicholson (flute), M. Lavigne (oboe), Mr. Probin (horn), M. Van Biene (violinello), Mr. L'Anson (contra-basso), Mr. Stimpson (organ), and Dr. Swinnerton Heap (pianist and Conductor). The programme, which might have been pruned with advantage, comprised, among other interesting works, Hummel's Septet in D minor, Mendelssohn's 43rd Psalm, "Judge me O God," two movements from the same composer's Sonata-duet for pianoforte and violinello in D, Schubert's Chorus for female voices "The Lord is my shepherd," Wagner's Bridal Chorus from "Lohengrin," a violin solo, Adagio and Polonaise, by Wieniawski, and a new song, "Three shadows," by Dr. Heap. The melodious Septet by Mozart's famous pupil is an old favourite here, but it has never been played with greater skill and effect than it was on this occasion by Dr. Heap, Mr. Nicholson, M. Lavigne, Mr. Probin, Mr. Abbott, M. Van Biene and Mr. L'Anson. In one or two passages the full, powerful tone of M. Lavigne was almost too much for the maintenance of the ensemble, but on the whole the performance was an admirable one, especially delighting the audience in the Menuetto and the Andante con variazioni. Full justice was done by the choir to Mendelssohn's noble setting of the 43rd Psalm and in the lovely chorus of Schubert, composed for the Frölich sisters in 1820, the fine quality of the ladies' voices was strikingly exemplified. Of the minor choral pieces, Dr. Hiles's part-song "Hush'd in death" was perhaps the most satisfactory. M. Van Biene exhibited a wonderful mastery of his instrument in a Valse by Dunkler, as well as in the Scherzo and Finale from Mendelssohn's D major Sonata, in which the playing also of Dr. Heap greatly impressed the audience. Dr. Heap was yet more successful in his subsequent performance of Liszt's exacting "Rigoletto" Fantasia, which excited great enthusiasm. Miss McKenzie's most effective songs were F. E. Bache's "Farewell" and Donizetti's "O Mio Fernando," both encored. Mr. Maas, who was in excellent voice, obtained a double recall after his singing of an air from "Luisa Miller," and was compelled to repeat the last verse of Dr. Heap's new song, a melodious and scholarly composition.

Madame Menter's Recital on the 22nd made ample amends for the poverty of her selection at Messrs. Harrison's Concert on the 5th, and in Beethoven's noble Sonata "Les adieux, l'absence, le retour," in a Prelude of Bach, and in a copious selection from the works of Chopin, including the famous Polonaise in A flat, the illustrious pianist showed that her marvellous technique was very far from being her sole title to distinction.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

WITH the beginning of Lent orthodox Bristol forswears a great deal of amusement, and from now till Easter we shall probably have scarcely any Concerts at which "the rule of evening dress is observed," this being apparently where the line is drawn during the season of abstinence. The week before Ash Wednesday was a full one, in a musical point of view. On January 30, Professor W. Macfarren gave a Lecture at the Museum on Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne Worte," and the attendance was so large that many had to be turned away, in consequence of which the Lecture was repeated on the following evening, when again the room was full to overflowing. On that night (the 31st) Mrs. Viner Pomeroy gave her third Chamber Concert (sixth season) at the Victoria Rooms; and on the 1st ult. the Orpheus Glee Society gave their annual Ladies' Night at the Colston Hall, to an audience of between 2,000 and 3,000.

The programme of the Chamber Concert on the 31st comprised Beethoven's String Quartet in E flat, Op. 74; Hummel's Sonata in A flat, Op. 92, for two performers on the pianoforte; Schumann's "Abendlied," for violin solo; and Spohr's String Quartet in A minor, Op. 74. Messrs. H. Holmes, Rice, Hill, and J. Pomeroy were the executants, as at the two former Concerts; with Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Roedel on the pianoforte. There was a large audience, and Mr. Holmes's solo was encored.

The Orpheus Choir was, as usual, faultless in execution and intonation throughout their long programme on the 1st ult. Mr. Riseley's talent for conducting is never more apparent than at the performances of this Society. It numbers between fifty and sixty members, and the voices are very well balanced, the tone of the altos being noticeably good. But it is in the delicate gradations of light and shade that the choir most plainly evidences its excellent training, the four-part singing at times producing in unanimity and finish an effect resembling that of a perfect string quartet. It is said that the acoustic properties of the Colston Hall are peculiarly favourable to this class of vocal music, and it may be the case, but the hall must be very bad that can make the singing of the Orpheus Society sound other than admirable. The programme on this occasion was as follows: "I wish to tune" (Wesley), "There is a Paradise" (Pearsall), "All hail!" (Martin), "Some of my heroes are low" (Stevens), "The Beleaguered" (Sullivan), "Green Thorn" (Callocott), "Drowsy Woods" (Storch), "The Little Church" (Becker), "Shortest and longest" and "Highland War-Song" (W. Macfarren), "Nymphs of the Forest" (Horsley), "The Voyage" (Mendelssohn), "Soldier's Love" (Kücken), "Hours of Beauty" (Hargreaves), "Gondolier Serenade" (Commer), "Absence" (Hatton), "Polka Serenade" (Schafer), and "Hail, smiling morn" (Spoforth). Mr. Walter Macfarren conducted his two glees, and had a very hearty reception. Mr. Ben. Gay, the well-known alto, a great favourite here, sang the solo (with murmuring accompaniment) in Kücken's "Soldier's Love," at the conclusion of which there was such a storm of applause that Mr. Riseley broke his rule against encores, and signed to the audience that their wish should be complied with; and, in the midst of the sudden silence produced by the unexpected gesture of the Conductor, Mr. Gay sang "Oft in the still night" with all his old sweetness and expression, to the great delight of his listeners.

On the 6th ult. Mr. John Barrett's choir gave their third annual Concert at the Lesser Colston Hall, J. S. Bach's Magnificat in D and Goetz's 137th Psalm constituting the principal part of the programme; and on the 17th ult. the Bristol Musical Association performed Cowen's "Rose Maiden" at the large hall.

Mr. Riseley has recommenced his Saturday evening Organ Recitals at the Colston Hall, having given one on the 3rd ult. and another on the 10th; but they were not sufficiently advertised, and the attendance was small. It is to be hoped that Mr. Riseley will in future make their dates more widely known.

A Concert of a particularly interesting nature was given on the 15th ult. by the local branch of the Kyrie Society, assisted by Mr. J. Pomeroy (violinello) and Mr. C. Bucknall, Mus. Bac., Organist of All Saints', Clifton, at the neighbouring village of Westbury. This Society gives fortnightly twopenny Concerts in Bristol and Westbury, taking for the first part of the programme the works of one of the great masters. On this occasion the composer chosen was Wagner, and there is a singular significance in the coincidence of a selection of his works being performed, probably for the first time in England, to a village audience within two days of his death. The Rev. W. Mann, Precentor of Bristol Cathedral, gave a short lecture on the life and works of the great musician, and Mr. Bucknall played the Dead March in "Saul" on the organ before the Concert was proceeded with. Each item on the first part of the programme was warmly received, the Spinning Chorus from the "Flying Dutchman" and Vieuxtemps' paraphrase for violin solo of the Prelied from "Die Meistersinger" being encored; while in the more "popular" second part no particular enthusiasm was displayed, except for Mr. Pomeroy's solo on the violinello, a Nocturne of Chopin's. Taking the character of the audience into consideration, these facts must speak for themselves to the happily decreasing number of opponents to Wagnerian music.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE month of February has passed without any musical event of more than ordinary importance. Mrs. Emily Clough's Chamber Concert at the Leeds Church Institute on January 26th was attended only by a small number of amateurs, and was not remarkable, save in one or two instances, for any performance of special excellence. Neither the concerted pieces nor Mrs. Clough's own pianoforte solos were of the standard which should have been reached; but both Signor Risegari and Mr. Frank Weston deserved and gained appreciative applause for their solos on the violin and cello respectively. Madame Edith Wynne appeared as the vocalist, and displayed her old taste in all her selections.

Signor Scuderi gave his annual Concert of Chamber Music in the Bradford Church Institute on the 9th ult., and provided an interesting programme, in which were included Beethoven's String Quartet in C minor (Op. 104) and Mozart's Piano Quartet in E flat; both were moreover well played. The artists were Madame Clara Ter Meer, whose singing was greatly enjoyed, Miss Averdieck (solo pianist), Signor Scuderi, Herren Heiss and Hannemann, and Mr. H. Smith.

On the 13th ult. the third of the present series of Leeds Chamber Concerts passed off with great success, at the Albert Hall. The appearance of Mlle. Marie Krebs was enough to ensure a large attendance, and thoroughly were those who were present rewarded, for the famous pianiste played all her solos in her very best style, and in Beethoven's Polonaise in C (Op. 89) surpassed all expectations: she also took part in two Trios—Spohr's in E minor (Op. 119) and Haydn's in A major—in conjunction with Herr Otto Peiniger (violin) and Mr. Chas. Ould (violinello): the Scherzo in the former work, and the Andante in the latter were wonderfully well rendered. Another excellent performance was that of Beethoven's Sonata in E flat for Violin and Piano (Op. 12, No. 3) in which Mlle. Krebs and Herr Peiniger worked together with the greatest success. Mrs. Hutchinson was the vocalist, and sang Sullivan's "Orpheus with his lute" and two German Lieder, being deservedly encored in the latter. The concert as a whole was, from a musical point of view, perhaps the most successful that has yet been given in this series.

The Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society's Concert was also given on the 13th ult., when Madame Georgina Burns was the principal vocalist; all her songs were powerfully rendered, and in the Polonaise "I am Titania" from Thomas' "Mignon," her cultivated style elicited the most enthusiastic applause. Solos were also given by Miss England and Messrs. Martin, Beaumont, and Haigh, all members of the society. The part-singing was not the least enjoyable feature of the concert, and for this satisfactory result the credit is chiefly due to the zeal of the society's conductor, Mr. Joshua Marshall.

The fifth Bradford Subscription Concert on the 16th ult. was largely patronised. The programme consisted of vocal and instrumental music. The vocalists were the Misses Robertson, who fully confirmed the favourable impression which they made at their first appearance in Bradford last season; Mr. Abercrombie, who has much improved of late; and Mr. Santley. The latter gentleman sang, we need hardly say, with the finish of a real artist. Madame Frickenhaus was the pianist, and selected as one of her solos Chopin's Sonata in B flat minor (Op. 35), in which the "Marche Funèbre" was impressively rendered. Herr Hollmann proved himself a talented violoncellist, and played the Andante and Finale from Golttermann's Concerto with the greatest taste. For the next concert, the last of the series, Gounod's "Redemption" is announced, and, as may be expected, its rendering is anticipated with no little interest.

The programme for the Leeds Musical Festival for 1883 is yet under consideration, but we have every reason to believe that a commencement will again be made with Mendelssohn's "Elijah," and that the same composer's "Lobgesang," Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in D, and a selection from Handel's oratorios will also be sung. The novelties will include Raff's last oratorio, "The End of the World," Dr. Macfarren's "King David," Mr. Frederic Clay's "Sardanapalus," and Mr. Barnby's "97th Psalm." Dr. W. Spark and Mr. Walter Parratt, Mrs. B., St. George's Chapel, Windsor, have been appointed organists.

EDINBURGH ORCHESTRAL FESTIVAL.

THE local journals allude to this annual event as again thoroughly successful. It has now taken place, in connection with the commemorative concert of the founder of the University Music Chair, for fifteen consecutive years. Mr. Hallé's orchestra having been on each occasion engaged by the "Reid" Professor. During that period the highest standard of orchestral music has been unflinchingly maintained, and, although the earlier festivals, for that very reason, may have been somewhat wanting in general popularity in a part of the kingdom where such music was then almost unknown, there seems to have been in Scotland an annual growth of appreciation of the works of the greatest masters, which are no longer listened to in stolid indifference or puzzled bewilderment, but with reverent attention and with musical intelligence. This progress has been proved, not only by the increased interest shown in the Reid Festival, but by a greater number of other orchestral concerts both in Edinburgh and Glasgow. It is needless to point out that these results have been mainly consequent upon the institution of an annual commemorative Reid Concert, which, developed into a three days' festival by the present Incumbent of the Chair, and rendered in the most efficient manner possible, first gave an impetus in Scotland to a greater love for instrumental music, by fanning into flame the latent spark of appreciation for the greatest works of musical art.

At this year's Festival a somewhat larger orchestra than usual was brought by Mr. Hallé, in order to give the Berlioz music as that master wrote it. Our space does not permit detailed allusion to the selections of the first Concert, on the 10th ult. We may say, however, that the overtures were Cherubini's "Anacreon," Sterndale Bennett's "Naiades," and Spohr's "Jessonda;" the symphony, Haydn's No. 4, and the concerto Beethoven's C minor, with Mr. Hallé, as soloist. The ballet music from Gounod's "Polyeucte" was the other orchestral item. Miss M. Davies and Mr. E. Lloyd gave solos by Handel, Weber, Schubert, &c. At the second Concert the overtures were "King Stephen," Beethoven; "Ossian," Gade; and "Siège de Corinth," Rossini. The concerto was Mendelssohn's, with Madame Néruda as violinist, who also took the solo part in Mozart's resuscitated (thanks to the great Leipzig edition in progress) "Haffner" serenade. The orchestral movements from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" were a novelty in Scotland. Miss Davies and Mr. Lloyd were again the vocalists, the eminent tenor singing music by the great operatic composer who died the following day at Venice—the prize song in "Meistersinger," and also a new and very telling song by Sir Herbert Oakeley, "Ad Amore," which won a well-deserved encore and was repeated.

On the 13th ult. the third concert took place, and with it ended the eighteenth Festival under the directorship of Sir Herbert Oakeley. An analytical programme—introduced here by him in 1867—was neatly got up and beautifully printed, and, what is perhaps more to the purpose, was excellently adapted to act as a guide to the music. The "Reid music," given according to the will of the General, was conducted, as in duty bound, by the Reid professor, both audience and orchestra standing during the performance of the March. The Overtures were Mendelssohn's "Athalia" and Weber's "Jubilee;" the Symphony, Beethoven's No. 4; the Concertos, Spohr's No. 9, superbly played by Madame Néruda, who also contributed Raff's Cavatina in D and Schumann's in A minor; soloist, Mr. Hallé, who never performed more finely. Svendsen's third Norwegian Rhapsody received an admirable interpretation, and Mr. Lloyd gave "Salve, dimora" and two songs by Schubert to perfection. Miss Mary Davies sang Gluck's aria, "Non, vi turbate, no" ("Alceste"), and subsequently Sir Herbert Oakeley's setting of Tennyson's "The days that are no more," with much good taste and power, gaining a persistent recall. The band did all justice to the beautifully written orchestral accompaniment, and the harp obligato was finely rendered on this occasion by Mrs. Frost. The last number on the programme—Weber's Overture—made a fitting ending to a festival for the arrangement of which the warmest praise is due to Sir Herbert Oakeley.

GOUNOD'S "REDEMPTION" IN AMERICA.

LAST month we drew attention to a signal triumph of justice in America: the United States Circuit Court, sitting at Boston, having decided that the publication of a piano-forte score does not entitle any one to arrange orchestral parts therefrom and perform the work as being either that of the composer or arranger. We now give Judge Lowell's remarks, and have no doubt that English readers, while accepting the law from the Bench, will recognise in it not only law but equity. The importance of the decision as affecting the whole vexed question of a copyright treaty between England and the United States is obvious. Yet more obvious is the fact that musical composers in Europe, and those who place their works before the world, now occupy a position across the Atlantic which should have been theirs at the outset, alike in the interests of art and of fair dealing.

The judgment runs as follows:—

"This is a motion to enjoin the defendant from causing to be performed Gounod's oratorio, or cantata, called 'The Redemption,' with full orchestral accompaniment. The plaintiff is a citizen of New York, and the defendant is a citizen of Massachusetts.

"The hearing was on the bill, the answer (to be taken as an affidavit), a stipulation of the parties, and oral evidence of experts.

"Charles Gounod, of Paris, composed the oratorio in question, with an orchestral accompaniment for forty or more pieces, and caused it to be performed for the first time, under his own direction, at Birmingham, in England, in August last, on occasion of a musical festival. The defendant avers his belief that the full score has been published in England, but he adduces no proof of this, and the stipulation finds this belief rests only upon the understanding that the law of England requires a deposit of a copy of the score in the British Museum within three months after the first performance. The law appears to make this requirement unless the score is in manuscript; but we have no evidence whether the score was or was not in manuscript at the time when it should have been deposited if not in manuscript, nor whether it was so deposited, and if so, whether it is open to public inspection. There is evidence that at some time, not specified, except that it was before the answer was filed, a few copies have been printed, marked 'as manuscript only,' for the use of the performers. We do not need to decide whether these copies were manuscript in the sense of the statute. There has been time, since the defendant first undertook to act as if the oratorio was open to him, to ascertain the true circumstances of the case in respect to this supposed publication.

"The composer did permit the words and vocal parts of his oratorio, set to an accompaniment for the piano, to be published in England, and the book can be bought in Boston, and has been produced in evidence. It is believed and admitted to contain all the melodies and harmonies of the original oratorio. It has, in the margin, references to the particular instruments which are to be employed in playing the different parts of the piece, or many of them.

"The plaintiff owns for this country whatever exclusive rights Gounod retained or could retain after the publication of the book. The defendant applied to the plaintiff to buy the exclusive right of performing the oratorio in Boston, but was told that negotiations were pending with the Handel and Haydn Society, of this city, for that right. These negotiations resulted in a purchase by that society. The defendant appears to have gathered from something which was said to him by the plaintiff, that the negotiations with the Handel and Haydn Society were likely to fall through, and to have begun his preparations as if this were already sure. When he heard that the bargain was made, he undertook to proceed, and to advance his performance so as to bring out Gounod's 'Redemption' before the time fixed by the society for their first performance, and accordingly advertised his own for next Sunday, January 21. Thereupon this bill was filed, and the defendant modified his advertisement by advice of counsel, so that, in the part material to this case, it read thus:

'BOSTON THEATRE.

First Performance in Boston of GOUNOD'S

REDEMPTION.

With New Orchestration arranged from indications in the published Pianoforte Score.'

"It is admitted, for the purposes of this motion, that the defendant has not copied Gounod's score, but has procured the band parts to be made by some unnamed composer or arranger of music.

"Two questions have been ably argued before us. First, Whether the publication of the book, with the score for the piano and the marginal notes, gives to every one the right to reproduce or copy the orchestral score if he can. Second, Whether a new orchestration, not copied from the original by memory, report or otherwise, but made from the book, is an infringement of the plaintiff's rights.

"These were the points argued, for it was admitted that a performance on the stage is not such a publication as will destroy the exclusive common law right of the author and his assigns to a dramatic or lyrical composition of this sort, though the composer is an alien not entitled to the benefits of our law of statutory copyright. Keene v. Wheatley, 4 Phil. 157; Bonicault v. Fox, 5 March. 87; Crowe v. Aiken, 2 Biss. 208; Palmer v. De Witt, 47 N. Y. 532; Tompkins v. Halleck, 133 Mass. 32.

"First. It is clear that the book is common property in the United States. What does it dedicate to the public? It was to instruct us upon this point that experts were examined; and their opinions were unanimous, that the score for the piano contains all the substance of the oratorio, but that the limitations of the instrument are such that it is impossible to express in such a score what the orchestra expresses with its various instruments, and that any one who adapts such a score for an orchestra must add a great deal to it, not in the way of new harmonies and melodies, but in the way of carrying out and applying them to produce the proper effects upon notes and combinations impossible for the piano. An orchestration can be made from the score by a competent arranger, and several such may be found in Boston, but the precise effects, called by the witnesses the 'colour,' which a composer gives to the orchestral parts cannot be reproduced, because the possible variations which may be produced by slight changes in the use of the several instruments are infinite. Twelve composers would make twelve different orchestrations. It may be doubted whether Gounod himself could reproduce it, if we can suppose him to have no aid from memory. We understand by this evidence that all the oratorios thus made would be somewhat like the original, and all would differ more or less from it. It is conceivable that some one might be considered better than Gounod's, if made by an abler composer than he; but the chances are that they would be much worse; and all might be, properly enough, called imitations of his work.

"These being the facts, we consider it to be clear that a dedication to the public of the arrangement for the piano does not dedicate what it does not contain, and what cannot be reproduced from it. Therefore the defendant does not in fact possess, and has no right to perform, Gounod's 'Redemption' as set for an orchestra. If he should have the opportunity to copy it he would not be permitted to perform it.

"Second. We find more difficulty in deciding whether the plaintiff's rights are infringed by a new orchestration. It is held in England that the publication of precisely such a book as this does not authorise a person, without license, to do precisely what this defendant has done. This was the law of England when the book was published: Boosey v. Fairlie, 7 Ch. D. 701; affirmed, 4 App. Cas. 711. A similar decision was announced in this country in 1882, in a very able and vigorous opinion by Chancellor Tuley, of the Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois: Goldmark v. Collmer (printed by itself in a pamphlet). In the English case there was no dissent in either the Court of Appeal or the House of Lords, and the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, which was reversed, was on a technical point of registration, though he did intimate that any one might take the music by memory, if there were no copyright, which is not the law of this country. Still, in that case, infringement was almost taken for granted. The argument against it, which was urged here, and is given by Drone in his able and suggestive work on Copyright, p. 609, is this: By the ordinary law applying to books, any one may make such use as he can of what he finds in a copyrighted work, if he does not copy from it; a fortiori, if he can reconstruct an opera or oratorio from a book which is common property, without copying the orchestral score which is protected, he is blameless.

"This argument has a logical and consistent appearance, but as applied to a musical work of this kind the practical objections are very great. Such a work is a single creation, of which the orchestration is an essential part; every reproduction of it from something else is necessarily an imperfect imitation, which nevertheless occupies the same field, and may ruin the original. In this respect an opera is more like a patented invention than like a common book; he who shall obtain similar results, better or worse, by similar means, though the opportunity is furnished by an unprotected book, should be held to infringe the rights of the composer. This view of the subject is very well stated by Chancellor Tuley. Another practical point of some importance is that it would be very difficult to prove, in many cases, whether memory had not had some part in the reproduction. If necessary to the logic of the argument, we might, perhaps, hold that the publication of the piano score is a restricted dedication of that and nothing more. This seems to be the opinion of the English judges, for they appear to have thought that the exact orchestration could be written from the book by any skilled arranger.

"Lastly.—It is plain that the defendant has undertaken to represent Gounod's full score. Even his modified advertisement, while it may notify experts that the reproduction cannot be exact, is calculated to express to the public that Gounod's work in its entirety is to be performed by him for the first time in Boston; and he hastened his prepa-

CONTENTS.

All praise to Him Who built the hills.
 Alleluia! the crown is on the Victor's brow.
 Alleluia! the strife is o'er.
 Break forth, O earth, in praises.
 By the Cross sad vigil keeping,
 Christian, dost thou see them?
 Come Thou, O come.
 Come unto Me, ye weary.
 Crown Him with many crowns.
 Earthly pilgrim, joyful see.
 Father! beneath Thy sheltering wing,
 Father, here we dedicate.
 Father, in Thy mysterious presence kneeling.
 From Sinai's trembling peak.
 Gentle Shepherd, Thou hast stilled.
 Gently, Lord, O gently lead us.
 God from on high hath heard.
 God, Who madest earth and heaven.
 Great Father, from Thy throne above.
 He that goeth forth with weeping.
 Here, O my Lord, I see Thee face to face.
 Honour and glory, thanksgiving and praise.
 Hosanna to the living Lord.
 How calmly wakes the hallowed morn.
 How pleasing is Thy voice.
 I lay my sins on Jesus.
 If life's pleasures cheer thee.
 In sweet content let all the anthem sing.
 In time of fear.
 It was the very noon of night.
 Jesu, my Lord.
 Lead us, O Father.
 Lo, sea and land their gifts outpour.
 Lo, the Bread which angels feedeth.
 Lord, in these days of humblest prayer.
 Lord of the harvest, Thee we hail.
 Lord of the harvest, Thee we hail (another setting).
 Lord, the shades of night surround us.
 Now God be with us, for the night is closing.
 Now, on land and sea descending (Vesper Hymn).
 Now the labourer's task is o'er.
 Now the light of heaven is stealing.
 Now the sighs and the sorrows.
 O day of joy, when first the light.
 O Food, the pilgrim needeth.

O God the Lord, to Thee we raise.
 O Jesu, Light of all below.
 O Lord, be with us when we fail.
 O Thou, Who in the light dost dwell.
 O world! behold upon the Tree.
 Oh, walk with God.
 Pleasant are Thy courts above.
 Praise, O praise our God and King.
 Praise, O Sion, thy salvation.
 Quiet, Lord, this trembling frame.
 Rejoice, ye pure in heart.
 Remember Me.
 Rest of the weary.
 Saviour, again to Thy dear Name we raise.
 Saviour, blessed Saviour.
 Sing to the Lord a joyful song.
 Softly now the light of day.
 Still, still with Thee.
 Still will we trust.
 That day of wrath, that dreadful day.
 The day is gently sinking to a close.
 The day is gently sinking to a close (another setting).
 The foe behind, the deep before.
 The Lord be with us as we bend.
 The radiant sun declining.
 The spring-tide hour.
 The valleys and the mountains.
 The Virgin stills the crying.
 There is an hour of peaceful rest.
 Thou knowest, Lord, the weariness and sorrow.
 Thou, Who dost build for us on high.
 Through the day Thy love hath spared us.
 To-day Thy mercy calls us.
 To give Thee glory, Heavenly King.
 To Thee, O Comforter Divine.
 To Thee, O God and Saviour.
 Upraised from sleep, to Thee we kneel.
 When day's shadows lengthen.
 When God of old came down from heaven.
 When, His salvation bringing.
 When I survey the wondrous Cross.
 When the day of toil is done.
 Whence shall my tears begin.
 Where the mourner weeping.

WAGNER'S FIRST GRAND OPERA.

(FROM THE GERMAN.)

FOR more than seven weeks had the opera singers, chorus, and orchestra of the Magdeburg Stadt-Theater of 1836 been tormented with the rehearsing of a new opera, the first ambitious production of its young musik-director, and still the youthful maestro complained that the soloists did not know their parts, that the chorus was not firm, the orchestra not prompt enough, and thus the first representation of the work had been postponed from day to day. To the manager, who was in want of funds, this delay was most inconvenient; pay-day was imminent, and the possibility of not being able to meet it weighed heavily on his mind. And Herr Bethmann (that was the manager's name) expected great things from this first work of his talented capellmeister; the new opera was to set afloat again the almost sinking ship of the Magdeburg-Theater. Nor was this expectation altogether unfounded. The town had for some weeks past been made acquainted with the grand preparations in scenery and costumes which the new opera had called forth. The numerous friends and acquaintances of the young composer, moreover, had taken care to spread abroad the most favourable accounts respecting the merits of the new work, so that—a most unusual occurrence in Magdeburg—seats had actually been booked beforehand in anticipation of a crowded house. Now, if Bethmann's operatic personnel had been less efficient than it actually was, there would have been no difficulty in accounting for the repeated postponement of a first performance. In those days, however, that stage had at its disposal such forces as in the present day can only be looked for at a first-class residential theatre. Freimüller and Schreiber were the tenors, Krug and Unzelmann, jun. the basses; Frau Pollert and Fräulein Limbach were the prime donne. To do justice therefore to these admirable singers it would appear that the onus of this long-deferred performance must be laid at the door of the young composer and capellmeister himself. The fact was he had in this his first work assigned notes to the singers which they had not in their throats, and passages to the musicians which made excessive demands upon their executive skill. Thus it was necessary to transpose, to alter and to curtail from one rehearsal to another. These rehearsals were held in those times on the ground floor of the theatre, and in a part emerging into a public thoroughfare. No wonder then if passers by would by degrees become acquainted beforehand with some portions of the new opera. The present writer still remembers a few of the observations made at the time by this out-door audience. "Just as in a synagogue!" one of these critics would exclaim (and that above all, of one of Wagner's works); "not a particle of melody!" another. Those were the observations which could be heard here daily.

Herr Bethmann stood at the door of the Stadt-Theater, casting his eyes upon the dark clouds that hung in the western sky, and praying for a merciful rain towards the afternoon, as the only means of driving the inartistic public of Magdeburg into his theatre. A three hours' rehearsal had just come to a close, and, drawing a long, deep breath, the tortured singers and musicians were leaving the building. At length the composer himself came, his betrothed lady, the talented tragic actress, Fräulein Planer (afterwards his first wife) by his side. No sooner had Bethmann caught sight of his capellmeister, than he exclaimed "Well, Herr Musik-director, how are you progressing? Shall we have your opera at last? May I get the bills ready for the day after to-morrow?"

"I think so," answered the composer with a smile.

"You only think so?" questioned Bethmann in great alarm.

"The solo-singers are tolerably well prepared, and with regard to the chorus and orchestra, I have built my hopes upon the night rehearsal."

"Night rehearsal?" cried the manager. "The night rehearsal? Man! how can you contemplate such a thing? Do you imagine that they will yet put up with a night rehearsal, when I am indebted to them to the extent of fully two months' salary? With the choristers, perhaps you may be able to arrange it; but the musicians, the born revolutionists, will never consent to it!"

"Never fear," replied the young composer, with a laugh; "they shall come, chorus, orchestra, and all. I have promised them a good supper, and a cooling bowl afterwards if the performance can take place the day after to-morrow. That has had the desired effect."

"Let us hope so," was the manager's reply. "For your own sake, too, I will hope that all may go well, since the first performance will be for your own benefit."

"On the contrary! You stand in greater need than I do of a successful first night. Take the first for yourself, by all means, and I will come in for the second."

"You are very generous," responded Bethmann.

"Less so than you think," the capellmeister rejoined, laughingly. "The good result of the first night, whereof there can now scarcely be a doubt, shall draw a still fuller house on the second!"

"Let us hope so, at all events," said the manager, returning to his theatre. The young composer sent a look of sympathy after the old man, and, with his handsome fiancée, went his way.

Two days later there was to be read on the playbills of the Magdeburg Theatre:

DIE NOVIZE VON PALERMO.

Grosse Oper in Drei Aufzügen.

VON

RICHARD WAGNER.

The house was completely filled on that evening. Great indeed, had been the expectations of the public, and not the least eager were those of the composer himself. In order to appreciate the feelings of a composer or dramatist on the occasion of the first performance of one of his own works it is necessary to have undergone that ordeal oneself. If there be some dramatic authors who, in such cases, can exhibit a calm or even apathetic demeanour, ten to one that the attitude is merely an assumed one. Inwardly, there is turmoil, the heart throbs violently, and if you felt the pulse you will find it increased to 120 beats a minute. This anxiety becomes greater still when the curtain rises, and during the following scenes. The coughing of the apprentice lad in the gallery provokes the poet's wrath, and the hard sneezing of the elderly lady in the pit drives him into despair. Should the first act please, and there be applause, and even calling before the curtain, the fate of the drama or opera is thus by no means decided. With the second and the following acts the warmth of the audience must yet increase, and the plaudits reach their climax in the last scene. What an ordeal, then, the poor poet has still to undergo, compared to mere the fire and water braved by Prince Tamino are mere child's play! The caprices of fortune are sometimes so very odd. May not, for instance, the gas suddenly go out in the middle of the last act and the house become enveloped in an Egyptian darkness? Or the prima donna, dissatisfied with the part assigned to her, faint away in the most effective scene? May not, at the most tragic moment of the piece, the black cat belonging to the theatre run across the stage, or the prompter have taken too much wine and perchance turn over six pages of his book instead of one? . .

It is not the intention of the present writer to criticise the early work of a composer who with his subsequent productions has obtained so deservedly great a name. He will merely chronicle the result of the first representation of the opera in question, which was nothing more or less than an unmistakable fiasco. The audience, whose expectations had been raised to too high a pitch, and who, moreover, could not at once reconcile themselves to this novel conception of music, became more and more dissatisfied as the opera progressed. This strange, unconventional music whereof they could not carry away with them a single note in their memory, confused and irritated them. In vain did they listen for one of those sweet tunes which so easily take hold of the fancy and fix themselves in the memory, such as they had hitherto met with in every other new opera; a characteristic which, indeed, to this day prevents some people from appreciating Wagner's music, and which to some extent—if not with such marked individuality as in his later productions—was already apparent in "Die Novize von Palermo." The new opera, in fact, was condemned in the most unequivocal manner by the public. A second performance was, with much difficulty, arranged some few days later, but the house was almost empty. Sorely disappointed in his strong hopes as he was, the genial composer nevertheless made good his word, and treated the assembled chorists and musicians to the promised supper after the trial of the first night was past.

The public verdict as regards this early opera of Wagner may be summed up in the words—too much orchestration, too little melody. The fact, however, that the mellifluous "Norma" had just previously been introduced to the acquaintance of the people of Magdeburg doubtless contributed to the adverse opinion expressed on the occasion in question. Real connoisseurs, on the other hand, though shaking their heads at many details contained in the new work, were yet constrained to admit having been struck by occasional flashes of genius, and to predict a great future for the young composer of "Die Novize von Palermo." How these prophecies have been fulfilled the world knows. Richard Wagner was able to write a "Tannhäuser" and a "Lohengrin;" was able to conceive and accomplish other works of gigantic proportions. And the fact alone that so far from being discouraged by his early failures, he should, on the contrary, have gathered a fresh stimulus from them for his indomitable devotion to his ideal, stamps him as a truly great artist.

We understand that Sir Thomas Elder, of Adelaide, has given a Local Scholarship for South Australia, and Mr. J. G. Whitcombe, Ex-Mayor of Portsmouth, has guaranteed a Local Scholarship for the Borough of Portsmouth at the Royal College of Music. These, with Sir William Clarke's Local Scholarship for the South Province of Victoria, make three Local Scholarships (£3,000 each) founded in the College. Lady Harvey, of Langley Park, Slough, has, in memory of her mother, the late Lady Elizabeth Pringle, daughter of John, first Marquis of Breadalbane, given a Scholarship to be called the Elizabeth Pringle Memorial; and Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., Mr. Howard Morley, and Mr. Charles Morley have increased their subscription to found a Scholarship. These, with the Courtenay and the Wilson Scholarships, make four Open Scholarships founded in the College. The mayors of the chief towns, and the several local boards and vestries have been requested to grant accommodation for the preliminary examinations to be held preparatory to the final examination for 50 scholarships, and the mayors were also asked to nominate three honorary local examiners. The replies to these have been extremely satisfactory. The Director of the Monday Popular Concerts has kindly promised free admission for the scholars of the College to all Monday evening concerts. The prospectus, giving particulars as to fees, studies, terms, &c., is now in preparation, and will shortly be issued.

The Finchley Choral Society gave its second performance this season on the 1st ult. at the National Schools, Church End. The first part of the programme consisted of J. F. Barnett's Cantata, "The Building of the Ship," the soloists in which were Miss Jessie Royd, Miss Clara Myers, Mr. John F. Probert, and Mr. Bicknell Young. The choruses were well rendered. The second part was miscellaneous, and included songs by the above named artists, "The Vikings" (Eaton Fanning), "The Curfew" (H. Smart), and "Jack and Jill" (Caldicot), by the choir, and pianoforte solos by Miss Mackness, R.A.M., and Mr. A. A. Yeatman. Miss Mackness also accompanied the Cantata on the pianoforte, and Mr. John Tunstall presided at the harmonium. The conductor was Mr. A. A. Yeatman, who was presented, on the evening before the concert, with a handsome ivory bâton by the members of the Society.

At a public meeting recently held in the Athenæum Rooms, Derby, certificates were given to the local students who had passed their examination under the rules of the Royal Academy of Music. The chair was taken by Alderman Bemrose, and Mr. Arthur O'Leary, one of the professors of the Royal Academy, who had acted as examiner, distributed the certificates. Mr. O'Leary, in an address to the meeting, took occasion to remark on the recent development of musical studies in England and on the higher rank now generally accorded to music in the public estimation. Not many years ago, he said, music was struggling against a feeling of apathy which pervaded the entire country, and the only institution in England to whose fostering care the neglected art was committed could at that time barely manage to exist. The local examinations instituted by the Royal Academy of Music had stimulated the desire to know more of the serious side of music. After pointing out the mistaken tendency which was sometimes shown in the junior section of the examinations to look upon the task set as too insignificant, the speaker said that the real artist manifested his power as much in expression as in mechanical difficulties, which astonished more than they pleased. There was much to learn in the simplest music. The deplorable habit had yet to be overcome of looking upon music as a mere amusement. Music could only flourish when treated seriously; and to the student who paid it serious attention it afforded pleasure of the highest kind—pure and intellectual. They could not wonder at the prejudice which they found among certain circles when they considered the inanity of many of the songs to which they were compelled to listen, and the vulgarity of the imported operatic burlesque. In England they had a unique treasure in their madrigals and glees—sentimental, serious, or humorous. Mr. O'Leary then distributed the prizes and certificates. At the close of the meeting votes of thanks were given to Mr. O'Leary, to Alderman Bemrose, and to those who had taken part in the proceedings of the evening.

At the second performance in Brighton of Gounod's Oratorio, "The Redemption," on the afternoon of the 3rd ult., every available seat in the dome of the Pavilion was again filled, and the success was in every respect as marked as on the first representation of the work. The principal vocalists were the Misses Robertson, Mrs. Irene Ware, Mr. Barton McGuckin, Mr. Lucas Williams, and Mr. Barrington Foote. The Brighton Herald says, "It is easy, perhaps, to fall into a vein of superlative admiration over such a work, just as it is easy to carp at some of the effects produced by M. Gounod as 'theatric;' but the fact remains that at more than one portion of this grand work—the work of his life, as the composer pathetically calls it—an audience is overwhelmed by what is little short of a majestic use of the splendid resources of a modern orchestra. The chorus which ends the second part, 'Unfold, ye portals everlasting,' may be cited as only one instance of a tour de force, remarkable not only for its grandeur, but for its simplicity. It is, in fact, a triumphant sequel to those impressive passages which earlier in the work treat with such solemnity and dignity the great Sacrifice on Calvary; and it is well followed by the more jubilant strain in the final section of the work which symbolises the New Dispensation." The choruses were excellently sung by Mr. Kuhe's Festival Choir; the orchestra was thoroughly efficient (three trumpeters of the 4th Royal Irish Dragoon Guards taking part in the grand closing chorus of the second section of the work) and the Oratorio was conducted with his usual skill by Mr. Randegger.

THE Belle Sauvage Glee Union gave its usual monthly Smoking Concert on the 8th ult., at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet Street, Mr. J. F. Wilson in the chair. The part-songs were very well rendered, especially "King Witlaf," "The Image of the Rose," and "The Retreat," the last-named being enthusiastically re-demanded. Mr. W. Syckelmoore, Mr. Lansmeer, Mr. H. E. Vickers and Mr. Lawrence contributed solos in excellent style and were much applauded, Mr. J. D. Henderson, Mr. Sydney Beckley and Mr. R. Moss being encouraged for the rendering of their respective songs. Mr. G. F. Bruce played two pianoforte solos in a highly effective manner and accompanied throughout.

A MEETING of the City Glee Club was held at the London Tavern, on Tuesday, the 6th ult. Mr. H. T. Smith, Treasurer, in the chair. The professional members present were Messrs. A. Lester, Dutton, W. Coates, G. T. Carter, F. Walker, W. Winn, R. Hilton, and T. Lawler. Mr. Turle Lee presided at the pianoforte. An excellent programme was well rendered. Not the least agreeable feature of the evening's proceedings was the presentation of a testimonial to Mr. Theodore Distin (who has recently retired from the Club), consisting of a handsome silver cigarette case, bearing the following inscription:—"Presented by the City Glee Club to Theodore Distin, Esq., with a purse of twenty guineas, as a small recognition of his valuable services during a period of twenty-four years." The Chairman in alluding to Mr. Distin's past services—which included seven years as the musical director of the Club—said that at the time Mr. Distin joined the Club it numbered only thirty-five members, the professional gentlemen giving their services almost gratuitously. The great advance in Glee Societies in the City of London, mostly amateur, during the last few years was, he said, chiefly owing to the admirable example set by the City Glee Club and a few other similar societies. Mr. Distin replied in feeling terms, thanking the Chairman and members of the Club for their handsome present and their kind recognition. Mr. Distin then sang a new song of his own composing, called "Allegiance," which was rapturously applauded.

At a meeting held in the Hall of the Dundee Young Men's Christian Association on January 29, Mr. Henry Nagel was presented with a cheque for £1000, a valuable gold watch, and a handsome silver jug, on the occasion of his retirement from the conductorship of the Dundee Amateur Choral Union, a position he has held for twenty-five years. The chair was occupied by the Provost, and Colonel Walker commenced the proceedings by reading a highly flattering address from the members of the Union, acknowledging the great benefits conferred upon the art in Dundee, as well as upon the Society, by the indefatigable exertions of Mr. Nagel, and expressing much regret at his retirement. In an excellent speech, Mr. Nagel returned thanks for the valuable gifts, which he said would be appreciated as kindly offerings from those with whom he had been so long pleasurably associated, and not as a sort of deferred payment for his work. It was announced that the names of the subscribers, alphabetically arranged, would be written on vellum, with the following inscription, which appears also on the watch and jug:—"Presented to Mr. Henry Nagel, with a gold watch, silver jug, and one thousand pounds, by the following subscribers, as a recognition of his long and arduous services to the cause of music in Dundee, and more particularly of his valuable work as conductor of the Dundee Amateur Choral Union, which position he filled gratuitously for the long period of twenty-five years. Dundee, 29th January, 1883."

On Saturday, the 17th ult., a Lecture on Singing was delivered at the Royal Institution by Dr. W. H. Stone, who exhibited some beautiful photographs, which Mr. Behnke has succeeded in obtaining, of his own soft palate and vocal ligaments in the act of tone-production. These photographs were thrown upon a screen by means of the electric light, and are the first results of the joint enterprise of Mr. Lennox Browne and of Mr. Behnke, who are actively engaged in embodying in a new and comprehensive book their respective experiences of vocal surgery and of voice-training. For several years scientific men have tried, but in vain, to achieve this result, which will help to settle many hitherto disputed points, and the knowledge derived therefrom will be of great value to all teachers of singing and of elocution.

THE second Concert of the Crouch End Choral Society took place on the 6th ult., at Christ Church School Room, before a large audience. The programme consisted of Alfred R. Gaul's sacred Cantata "The Holy City," a miscellaneous selection, including an effective part-song by C. W. Pearce, Mus. Bac. The soloists were Mrs. Alfred Dye, Miss Bessie Dimond, Miss Eleanor Crux, Mr. Arthur Davey, and Mr. Charles Victor. Mr. C. W. Pearce rendered valuable aid at the harmonium, and Mr. C. W. Lovejoy presided at the piano. Mr. Alfred J. Dye conducted.

At the Annual Festival in connection with St. Saviour's Church, Eastbourne, on January 30, the Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., Mus. Doc., gave a short lecture on the main principles of musical services in the Church of England, in the course of which, after relating his experience of the music he had heard in Rome, Germany and France, he confidently asserted that on the whole the English School of Church Music was by far the best for the services of the Sanctuary. The lecturer then proceeded to notice Tallis, Bird, Bence, Batten, Morley, Gibbons, and other composers of choral services of the fifteenth century, remarking that "the music of Gibbons contained the purest counterpoint ever produced, and would compare favourably with that of the Italian writers, who were indeed indebted to him as the great standard." Dr. Sangster (organist of the Church) also addressed the meeting on the subject of the new organ at St. Saviour's, and alluded in flattering terms to the Recital given on the instrument that afternoon by Sir Frederick Ouseley. During the evening several glees and part-songs were well rendered by the choir of the church.

At the recent examination held at the College of Organists the following gentlemen satisfied the examiners for Associateship: R. C. Banks, Rochdale; F. N. Baxter, Tetbury; R. Briant, London; T. Cox, Wolverhampton; M. Fairs, South Shields; S. Hall, Stalybridge; A. Hann, Ilminster; H. H. Hoyle, Queensbury; W. Jones, Woodville; E. H. Lemare, Ventnor; O. A. Mansfield, Warminster; J. H. Olding, London; R. Y. Mander, Leamington; C. E. Melville, Leeds; H. W. Richards, London; C. W. Moss, Ipswich; G. J. Robertson, North Tawton; S. Round, Tipton; C. H. H. Tipple, Reading; P. A. Strickland, Leeds; F. W. Sykes, Selby; R. F. Tyler, Woolwich; J. W. Wallis, London; J. E. W. West, London; and H. D. Whetton, London. For Fellowship: F. N. Abernethy, London; F. J. Harper, Hull; H. Hudson, Southampton; and H. Robertson, London. The examiners were Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. J. Frost, Messrs. H. Gadsby, James Higgs, Mus. B., E. H. Turpin, and T. Wingham.

A CONCERT was given in the New Town Hall, Kensington, on Tuesday, the 20th ult., for a charitable purpose. The programme was an attractive one, and consisted of songs by Miss Annie Morant, Miss Ellen Marchant, Miss Amy Richards, Miss Emmeline Dickson, Mr. W. H. Burgen, and Mr. M. S. Skeffington; recitations by Miss Carrie Lawrence; pianoforte solos by Miss Florence Waud, a pianoforte duet by Miss Praetorius and Mr. F. Nash, and violin solos by Mr. G. Leopold. Masters Denne, Passey, and Ross sang Claribel's "Children's Voices," the chorus being given by the members of the St. Barnabas choir. Mr. H. Leopold and Mr. M. S. Skeffington conducted, and also accompanied the singers. There was a full attendance, the audience being much pleased with the excellence of the entertainment throughout.

MR. J. S. CURWEN, president of the Tonic Sol-fa College, has recently concluded a series of large public meetings in the principal towns of Scotland, extending over three weeks. He visited Forfar, Arbroath, Coatbridge, Airdrie, Dunfermline, Kirkcaldy, Dumbarton, Irvine, Kilmarnock, Ayr, Greenock, Glasgow, Edinburgh, Boness, Galashiels, Dumfries and Hawick, addressing audiences varying from 800 to 1600 persons, on the nature and results of the Tonic-Sol-fa system and its value in musical education. United choirs in each town, gathered for the occasion, illustrated the lectures by singing, and demonstrated the facility in reading music at first sight which the Tonic-Sol-fa notation gives. Mr. Curwen also addressed the Free Church Normal students at Edinburgh and Glasgow, and the United Presbyterian theological students in Edinburgh.

MR. COWEN'S Scandinavian Symphony was given on January 27 at one of the Boston Symphony Concerts, conducted by Mr. George Henschel, its success being such that a repetition, on the 1st ult., became necessary at the Concert of the same Society in Cambridge University. The full score, which has been recently published, is dedicated to Mr. Hueffer, who introduced the work to the notice of Herr Richter, and thus started it on its successful Continental progress.

THE members of the East Finchley Choral Society gave their second Concert in the Lecture Hall, on Tuesday, the 6th ult., before a large and appreciative audience. Bennett's Cantata "The May Queen" occupied the first part of the programme, and was performed in a highly creditable manner. The solo parts were well rendered by Madame Willis, Miss Upton, Mr. E. J. Field and Mr. T. E. Snell. Miss James presided at the pianoforte and Mr. Edwin Drewett, R.A.M., at one of Mason and Hamlin's Concert American Organs. Mr. I. H. Jayes was an efficient Conductor. The second part included two pianoforte solos by Mr. Drewett, a glee and two choruses by the Society (Mr. Greenslade conducting), a duet for the piano and American organ, played by Mr. Drewett and Mr. B. C. Wainwright, and songs by members of the Society.

A MUSICAL Lecture, entitled "Glimpses into the Life and Character of Handel," was delivered in the Lecture Hall attached to St. John's Wood Presbyterian Church, on Tuesday, the 13th ult., by Mr. F. G. Edwards, Organist of the church. The lecture was interspersed with airs from Handel's Operas and Oratorios, and selections from the "Water Music" and Suites. An interesting feature was the Gavotte from "Otho," played by the lecturer upon a virginal made in 1666; this, with a similar instrument inscribed "Joannes Ruckers me fecit," bearing date 1590, were kindly lent by Messrs. Chappell and Co. Several facsimiles of Handel's writing, signatures to his will, the "Messiah" MS., a large portrait, statuette, &c., were on view. The lecture was listened to by a crowded and appreciative audience.

MENDELSSOHN'S 13th Psalm, "Lord, how long wilt Thou forget me?" was sung with an augmented choir of about sixty voices at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, on Thursday evening, the 22nd ult., and will be repeated on Thursday, the 8th inst., commencing at 8 p.m. The choir of the Kyrie Society, conducted by Mr. Malcolm Lawson, will perform Handel's "Messiah" in the same church on the Wednesday before Easter (21st inst.), commencing at 8 p.m. Admission to the church will be free, but a collection is to be made on behalf of the organ, on which there is still a debt. The next Organ Recital will be given by Mr. W. G. Wood, of Christ Church, Woburn Square, on Tuesday, the 6th inst., at 8 p.m.

THE first of a series of musical and elocutionary entertainments was given in the Lecture Hall, adjoining Trinity Chapel, Brixton, on Friday evening, January 26, before a large and appreciative audience. The artists were—vocalists, Miss Janet St. Clair, Miss L. Shrimpton, and Miss E. Oldham; Messrs. Kabery, J. Ogier, and H. J. Eldridge. Miss Cutting was warmly applauded for her excellent playing of two pianoforte pieces, and a couple of effective flute solos were contributed by Mr. W. Wood. Several anthems and part-songs were well rendered by the choir. Mr. J. Leigh presided at the harmonium, and Mr. A. J. Crabb (the Organist) conducted.

ON the 14th ult. the first of the Special Services announced for that date and for the 28th ult. took place at St. Thomas's Church, Portman Square, when Part I. of Gounod's Oratorio "The Redemption" was excellently rendered. A special choir has been trained for the occasion by Mr. Edmund Rogers, Organist and Director of the Choir; and the result proved the careful manner in which the work had been prepared. The solo vocalists were Miss White, Miss Florence Wallis, Mr. Hulbert L. Fulkerston, and Mr. Henry Baker. Mr. C. T. Corke gave valuable assistance at the organ, and Mr. Edmund Rogers conducted.

MR. SIMS REEVES'S Concert at St. James's Hall on the 20th ult. proved a brilliant success, some hundreds of people being unable to gain admission. Mr. Reeves was in good voice, and sang "Spírito gentil" and "The Death of Nelson" with all his old charm of style. In addition to the vocal contributions of Miss Santley, Miss Effie Clements, Miss Spenser Jones, Madame Sterling, Mr. Herbert Reeves, Mr. Santley, and the Anemoic Union, the programme was varied by recitations by Mr. Henry Irving and Mr. J. L. Toole. Mr. Reeves announces a repetition of the Concert on Tuesday, May 1.

THE members of the Dulwich Grove Choral and Orchestral Society gave their first Concert on the 12th ult., at the Lecture Hall, before a large and appreciative audience. The first part of the programme consisted of C. Ward's Cantata "Nativity," under the conductorship of Mr. W. H. Hook; and the second of unaccompanied part-songs and glees. The singing of Mrs. Charles Edwards and Mrs. Charles Saffell received well-deserved applause. The Misses Molteno, Rodgers, and Messrs. Shill, Wallis, Howe, and Eager also rendered efficient assistance.

MR. G. E. HEDGES was the organist at the free popular Organ Recital, held in Wycliffe Chapel, Philpot Street, on Monday, the 5th ult. The programme included Rossini's Overture to "Guillaume Tell" and an Andante and March composed for the occasion by Mr. Geo. Merritt, the Choirmaster, which was encored.

A SUCCESSFUL Concert was given in connection with the London and North-Western Library and Literary Association at Euston Station on the 12th ult. Miss Kate Poole played two violin solos, which were warmly received, the first gaining an encore. Signor Paggi (cello) and Herr Koch (piano) gave an effective reading of the Andante and Allegro from Mendelssohn's Sonata in B flat. A feature of the evening was Herr Koch's admirable interpretation of Chopin's Scherzo in B minor. A song, "Zuleika," by Herr Koch, was well rendered by Mr. Gostic.

AT St. Michael and All Angels' Church, North Kensington, on Quinquagesima Sunday, the evening service was rendered throughout with the aid of a complete orchestra, selected from the Crystal Palace and other bands, conducted by Mr. Sidney Naylor, Mr. T. L. Forbes at the organ. The anthem consisted of the first part of "The Creation." The orchestration of the services and hymns was effectively arranged by Mr. Naylor. An overflowing congregation testified to the growing estimation in which these periodical orchestral services are held.

All exercises are to be sent to the Professor of Music, Sir Frederick A. Gore Ouseley, St. Michael's, Tenbury, as early as possible. None can be received after the end of June.

A MATINÉE MUSICALE was given at Messrs. Blüthner's Rooms, in Kensington Gardens Square, on the 3rd ult., by Madame Eugene Oswald, who performed Beethoven's Sonata, No. 2, in D minor, and Chopin's Berceuse. She was assisted by Herr Hermann Koenig (violin) and Herr Otto Leu (violinello). The vocalists were Mr. Bicknell Young, Miss Clara Myers, Miss Helen Akroyd, and Miss Mary Davies.

HERR HANS RICHTER announces a series of nine Concerts at St. James's Hall on May 7, 10, 21 and 26, June 4, 11, 18 and 25, and July 2. These performances are now thoroughly established in public estimation; and there can be little doubt that this, the seventh season, will receive, as before, the cordial support of all lovers of high-class music.

THE Festival of the Three Choirs will be held this year at Gloucester, on September 4, 5, 6, and 7. We understand that it has been decided to produce Gounod's "Redemption" on the occasion.

THE Bloomsbury Choral Association, conducted by Mr. W. G. W. Goodworth, L. Mus. T.C.L., gave its second Concert on the 10th ult., at the Schoolroom, Richmond Street, Maida Hill, when, besides part-songs, operatic choruses, &c., by the choir, Mr. S. Vernon and Mr. J. J. Keliher gave pianoforte and flute solos respectively. Songs were sung by Miss M. Townsend, Miss C. Stokes, Mrs. G. Edwards, Mr. F. A. Goodworth, Mr. E. E. Barnard, and the Conductor. Mr. S. Vernon and Mr. F. Pogson acted as accompanists.

MR. C. E. MILLER, the Organist of Lambeth Parish Church, gave an Organ Recital at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Waterloo Road, on the 15th ult. The programme included compositions by Bach, Mendelssohn, Sir F. Ouseley, Sir W. S. Bennett, Onslow, Adams, and C. H. Lloyd, all of which were artistically rendered by Mr. Miller, who, we believe, gave his first Recital in London on this occasion. Master H. A. Bartlett (of St. Paul's Cathedral) sang two solos with much taste. There was a large audience.

DR. HILES read a paper, on the 2nd ult., at a meeting of the Debating Society in Owens' College, Manchester, on "Music an Essential Part of Education." Several interesting and novel views were unfolded, showing the exacting discipline which a study of the artistic and scientific phases of music affords. After friendly discussion a resolution was unanimously passed "That the study of music has an educational influence of so high and exacting a character as to entitle it to full recognition as an essential part of collegiate training."

MR. SINCLAIR DUNN gave his third annual Concert at the Royal Academy of Music on the 13th ult., before a large audience. The principal vocalists were Miss Effie Clements, Mrs. Irene Ware, Miss Augusta Arnold, Messrs. Arthur Burrows, Sinclair Dunn, Egbert Roberts, and Edward Grime, all of whom were highly successful, several of the solos eliciting enthusiastic encores. Some pianoforte pieces, excellently rendered by Miss Margaret Gyde, contributed much to the success of the evening. Mr. W. G. Wood accompanied most ably on the pianoforte.

THE St. George's Glee Union held its 160th monthly Concert at the Pimlico Rooms on the 2nd ult., when a miscellaneous programme was well rendered. The solo vocalists were Miss Nellie Watts, Miss Mathilde Paque, Mr. R. F. Roberts, and Mr. Herbert Schartau. Pianoforte solos were contributed by Herr von Joel and Mr. George Sumpter. The part-singing by the choir, which mustered about fifty voices, was unusually good. Mr. Joseph Monday conducted.

THE Durham Musical Society (Conductor, Mr. T. Albion Alderson) will give, at its next Concert, in the last week in April, Schumann's "Pilgrimage of the Rose" and Bennett's "May Queen;" and the Newcastle-on-Tyne Amateur Choir (under the same Conductor) will give its second Concert of the season on May 1, when Gault's "Holy City" and Dr. Cresser's "Eudora" will be sung, the last-named work under the conductorship of the composer.

THE competition for the Baumer Scholarship at the Watford School of Music (for proficiency in pianoforte-playing) took place at the Public Library on the 9th ult. The examiner was Mr. John Francis Barnett, and the successful candidate was Miss K. S. Burns. The scholarship is the gift of the Head Master, Mr. Henry Baumer, and entitles the holder to one year's tuition in pianoforte and harmony at the school.

WE regret to record the death of Mr. T. Knowles, an old inhabitant of Windsor, and well known in musical circles, more particularly in connection with the choir of St. George's Chapel, to which at one time he belonged. At the funeral the members of the choir were present, and the anthem "The souls of the righteous" (Elvey) was most impressively sung.

STUTTFORD'S Patent String Peg, a specimen of which has been forwarded to us, appears admirably adapted for bow instruments, guitars, banjos, &c.; the difficulty often experienced in fitting a string being materially lessened if not entirely obviated, by its use. Each peg is numbered, near its string-hole for the string it is intended to hold; and when accurately adjusted, there can be little doubt of its efficacy.

GOUNOD's "Messe Solennelle" will be sung at the High Celebration at St. John's Church, Horselydown, Southwark, of which Mr. Richard Lemaire is Organist and Director of the Choir, on Easter Day; and Stainer's Cantata "The Daughter of Jairus" is to be given at the Dedication Festival, in April, with orchestral accompaniment.

REVIEWS.

Stabat Mater. For Soli, Chorus and Orchestra. Composed by Anton Dvorák. (Op. 58.)
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THERE is so much to say in an analysis of this very important work that we shall take up no space with mere words of introduction. Such, indeed, are not needed: Dvorák is sufficiently well known for a hearty welcome and respectful attention whenever he comes before us with a novelty in his hand.

No. 1—Quartet and Chorus, "Stabat Mater dolorosa." This number deals with the grand old Latin hymn as far as "Quis est homo," and is, therefore, a comprehensive expression of the sorrow of the Virgin Mother juxta crucem. It opens (Andante con moto, B minor, 3-2) with an orchestral introduction seven bars long, and important for more reasons than its length since here are found displayed the materials, in great part, from which the whole movement springs. First we have a pianissimo dominant pedal, direct and inverted, sustained through sixteen bars, during eight of which it is heard alone. At the ninth bar this theme begins:—

Here is, in great measure, the germ of the movement, and we shall call it, for distinction's sake, the "Stabat" theme. Let us, also, say at once that Dvorák divides it into two members, respectively marked a and b above. In the first instance, however, he treats it as a whole, and for many bars it is heard continuously in one or other part of the orchestra, attended by chromatic harmonies that accentuate its wailing character. It at length gives way to a short phrase of six notes—

treated at the outset in ascending sequence, and leading, through a long crescendo to a tremendous crash upon a diminished chord, sustained during an entire bar. Subsequently the "Stabat" theme appears, with fine relief, in the relative major; but the gloom of the movement soon returns, and, reiterating the second member of the theme, the introduction dies away for the entrance of the chorus. That entrance is a curiosity, a resolution of the dominant seventh harmony of A being refused in favour of the tonic chord, as thus:—

The composer's object here is as little obvious as what he gains by a transition that can hardly be called beautiful. With the foregoing materials the chorus in the first instance deals, presenting a combination of gloomy majesty and sharp anguish such as even music rarely attains. Presently we arrive at soli passages, with choral answers, as to which let us apply the principle ex uno disce omnes. Here is one of sufficient impressiveness for a clear idea of the rest:—

SOPRANO SOLO.
O quam tris-tis et af- flic-ta p Trombe & Tromboni.

CHORUS. Strings unison.
O quam tris-tis et af- flic-ta,

From the intense feeling of passages like the foregoing the movement goes on to a Molto tranquillo in F, wherein the soli and chorus are employed together. This does not well lend itself to extract, still less to verbal description. Enough that the section in F is constructed entirely upon a tonic pedal and is very beautiful, conspicuous among its features being a charming phrase—reiterated in the orchestra, and calling to mind, more than faintly, the Fire motive in Wagner's "Walküre." At the close of this more elaborate section, a return is made to the original key, and a retrospect of the whole of the first section follows, with sundry changes in detail. The coda is most impressive, though based almost entirely upon the four notes constituting the second member of the leading theme. We gladly recognise the very great power of this number as a whole. Technically, it shows what a master can make out of slight material, while its effect upon the imagination and the emotions is exceedingly great. On the score of propriety, hypercriticism might, perhaps, suggest that the idea of a mother lamenting the tragic death of her son demands more simple and tender paths. On the other hand, Dvorák might have chosen to regard the scene at the foot of the Cross in its relation to the greatest and most far-reaching event that history records.

No. 2. Quartet, "Quis est homo."

This number (Andante sostenuto, E minor, 3-4) opens with a theme for contralto, afterwards taken up in succession by the other voices, with varied counterpoint wherein the voices to which the subject has already fallen take part. There is an orchestral introduction of six bars, subsequently used, not only as an interlude, but as a part of the vocal design. The first three bars contain its chief feature, and are given to corno Inglese, clarinet, and bassoon:—

The theme, as first announced, runs in manner following:—

Quis est ho-mo
Qui non fle-ret

p Wind.
p Strings.
ho-mo qui non fle-ret, Matrem Chris-ti si vip Horn.
p sempre.
-de-ret In tan-to sup- pli-ci-o?

The introductory bars now appear by way of interlude, after which the tenor takes up the theme, then the bass, and lastly the soprano, the orchestral and vocal counterpoint becoming more elaborate at each repetition. Presently, after the introductory theme has appeared in the vocal parts, we reach a "second subject" in the orthodox relative major key—

Pro . . . pec-ca-tis su-æ gen-tis

treated imitatively at some length, the trumpet and oboe being by turns conspicuous as accompaniment. Then, through the introductory subject, we get back to the original key and theme, which, after further treatment, leads to a climax that once more brings in the preliminary matter, introducing it with the subjoined striking passage:—

Pro pec-ca-tis su-æ gen-tis Vi-dit Je-sum

p Horns & Tromboni.

In the coda all the voice (Unis.) whisper the words "Vidit suum" &c., on the key-note, while the wind instruments have sustained chords. Nothing could be more impressive, or more fully atone for what some critics may urge is here and there undesirable elaboration of detail.

No. 3. Chorus, "Eia Mater."

Reference has already been made to the fashion in which Dvorák uses up his subject matter—presenting a few thoughts in so many varied forms that ample relief is secured, conjoined with a structural unity impossible through any other means. We have a remarkable example in the number now before us, the whole of which springs from two bars:—

Andante con moto. E - ia, ma-ter, fons a - mo-ris,

E - ia, ma-ter, fons a - mo-ris, e - ia

Nor is the composer faithful only to one idea; he adheres with equal steadfastness to his key, rarely leaving it for a moment, and then keeping as close to it as possible. Yet there is no monotony. Observe, for instance, how beautifully the bass phrase shown above is expanded—

E - ia, ma - ter, fons a - mo - ris, and, again, what a striking climax is reached further on—the orchestra fills in the chords, as indicated, with repeated crotchets :—

ff pp
- ti - re vim do - lo - ris.
Basses.

Note, finally, the effect of the theme as "augmented" in the bass:—

pp E - ia, ma - ter, fons a - mo - ris.

Further annotation of this movement can hardly be required to prove that it has singular charm and power.

No. 4. Solo and Chorus, "Fac ut ardeat cor meum."

Once more we find a small and fruitful germ, and again in the opening bars :—

Largo. Flute & Oboe.

Brass. f. Clar. Fag. & Horns.

Facc ut ar-de-at cor me-um . . .

A musical score for the song 'The Rose Tree'. It features two staves. The top staff is for the voice, with a treble clef and a key signature of one flat (B-flat). The bottom staff is for the piano accompaniment, with a bass clef and a key signature of one flat. The music is in 4/4 time. The melody is simple and catchy, with a repeating pattern of eighth and sixteenth notes. The piano accompaniment provides a steady harmonic foundation with chords and moving lines.

From the continuation of the solo there is much to quote did space permit, but we go on to the entrance of the chorus, where the key changes to E flat major. Mark the delightful contrast, heightened by employment of the female voices accompanied by organ only:—

pp Organ.

A musical score for a vocal ensemble, featuring a treble and bass staff. The treble staff has a key signature of two flats and a common time signature. The melody is written in a series of eighth and sixteenth notes, with a slur over a group of notes. The bass staff provides a harmonic accompaniment. The text "colta voci." is written below the treble staff.

The solo resumes, much as before; so does the chorus; now, however, to be expanded, and presently, by the most chromatic progression of its theme, distinctly to suggest the "Stabat" motive in the opening number. A third time the solo enters, but avoids its old subject, which now appears exclusively in the orchestra, and is almost continually present to the end. There is, perhaps, less decided inspiration in this number than in any one of its predecessors. It strikes us by its artifice rather than by its poetic expression.

No. 5. Chorus, "Tui nati vulnerati."

Here the composer breaks new ground. He stops the procession of minor keys and the long, unbroken use of chromatic harmonies, preferring to write a flowing 6-8 movement in E flat that only once or twice departs from the simple and natural manner in which, after eight bars of orchestral introduction, the vocal music begins:—

Tu - i na - ti vul - ne - ra - ti,

Andante con moto quasi allegretto. mf

pp c.c.

Tu - i na - ti vul - ne - ra - ti, tu - i.

in this unaffected manner the number continues, with only one brief change; till its second subject—un poco più mosso—is reached:—

Tu - i na - ti vul - ne - ra - ti.

This breaks but for a little while the smooth flow of the quaver passages, and soon the first tempo and theme return by way of winding up the number.

No. 6. Solo and Chorus, "Fac me vere tecum flere."

Once more the composer opens fresh ground, this number having as little in common with its predecessor as that had with the pages foregoing. There is something of Handelian directness and vigour in the theme with which the solo opens, after sixteen bars of orchestral introduction in the same style:—

Fac me ve-re te-cum fle-re, te-cum fle - re,

This is repeated in three-part harmony by the male voices, as is a continuation of the theme; in each case the orchestra having a distinctive counterpoint. The whole subject then reappears in its complete form—first for the solo and next for the male chorus, as before, but with varied harmony. Afterwards a brief contrasted episode presents itself, the solo again leading, echoed by the chorus. Its character may be judged from the first phrase:—

The whole of the chief theme next returns, with further change of treatment, and the episode likewise reappears, with an extension which forms a coda to the whole. Doubtless the greater simplicity of this number, when compared with most of the others, makes it welcome as a relief. At the same time, it is not throughout marked by spontaneity, the composer choosing to indulge a fondness for elaboration that does not in every instance appear to have a raison d'être. An examination of the full score might, however, reveal designs concealed in the pianoforte transcription.

No. 7. Chorus, "Virgo, virginum preclara."

It is evident at the beginning of this chorus that beauty and tender grace without affectation or laboured effort are to be its characteristics:—

From the mingled simplicity and elegance here shown the number scarcely ever departs, and it is therefore needless to multiply either remarks or quotations. Enough that the whole work contains nothing better adapted to become popular for reasons which all, musicians and non-musicians, can appreciate.

No. 8. Duet, "Fac ut portem."

Another instance of the careful economy with which Dvůrák makes the most of his thematic material comes before us. The main idea of the Duet (soprano and tenor) lies, so to speak, in a nutshell, and here it is:—

With this the composer works throughout the whole of the duet, voice answering voice with the quoted phrase or others closely related, while, if the theme drops from the vocal parts it appears at once in the orchestra. Let no one suppose that hereby poverty is indicated. Such treatment, when successful, points to wealth—to the abundance of resource that enables a thought to be presented in many forms, as one and the same diamond reflects many rays of different colours.

No. 9. Solo, "Inflammatu et accensus."

This is a remarkable and very masterly number. It contains two distinct and contrasted themes, one inspired by a sense of majesty, the other pleading and pathetic. A brief quotation in each case will convey what we mean better than many words. The voice begins thus, after the usual introductory bars:—

From this the transition is great to theme the second:—

Without occupying undue space it is impossible to convey a just idea of the many beauties contained in this impressive solo, and it must suffice to leave the foregoing illustrations as partly showing the nature of its materials. Particularly beautiful is the development of the second subject. Its refinement and tenderness are beyond praise.

No. 10. Quartet and Chorus, "Quando corpus."

Dvůrák not only follows the example set by Beethoven in his First Mass, by Rossini in his "Stabat," and by Mozart's "Requiem"—to mention no others—but he improves upon it; that is to say, he forms the bulk of his final number out of the materials which served for the first. Thus the "Quando corpus" leads off with the dominant pedal that ushered in the "Stabat Mater," and its matter is obviously suggested by, where it does not exactly reproduce, the music of that number. So with the elaborate ensemble for soli and chorus on the word "Amen." Here the "Stabat" motive is prominent throughout a contrapuntal movement from which it would serve no useful purpose to make such quotations as alone could be given. Enough that harmonic masses and counterpoint help to form a magnificent climax of varied grandeur and consistent impressiveness.

To sum up—this "Stabat Mater" is a notable work, and approaches as near to greatness as possible, if it be not actually destined to rank among world-renowned masterpieces. It is fresh and new, while in harmony with the established canons of art; and, though apparently laboured and over-developed in places, speaks with the force and directness of genius.

Solemn Mass in E flat. By T. R. Buckton.

Mass (St. Joseph). By J. Short.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

WHILE music is steadily winning its way as an aid to devotion in the various dissenting communities, it cannot be said that the musical representatives of the Roman Catholic faith in this country have recently displayed much activity in their own special sphere. The two Masses named above claim attention, chiefly because so few examples of a similar kind from the pens of English composers have lately come under our notice. Mr. Buckton is organist and choirmaster of St. Augustine's, Manchester, and it appears from a letter written by Canon Wilding, of that church, that the Mass in E flat has been performed frequently during the last few years, and that he considers "the style of it to be good and quite church-like." After such a testimonial it seems invidious to raise objections; but from a strictly musician's point of view, Mr. Buckton's Mass can scarcely be spoken of in terms of praise. In manner it belongs to the weakest Italian school, but as difference of opinion may rightly prevail as to what are the true characteristics of church music, it would be unfair to condemn the work on that score. When, however, we find theoretical errors of the most atrocious kind scattered up and down the pages of the score, it behoves us to express regret that the composer should have rushed into print without submitting his work to the revision of some competent musician, who would have informed him, among other things, that consecutive fifths and octaves are forbidden.

Mr. Short's Mass is far more commendable. In manner it is more solid, the resources of counterpoint being employed to a moderate extent, while the writing throughout is musically and fairly expressive. The composer is probably familiar with the best examples of Haydn, Mozart, Schubert, and Cherubini, and his music reflects the style of these great exemplars, allowing for an intentional conciseness, the Mass being written for ordinary church use.

 [Sampson Low, Marston, Searle and Rivington.]

MR. POOLE, in his life of Bach, modestly expresses a hope that it may be the means of preparing a worthy reception for the English translation of Dr. Spitta's elaborate and exhaustive work, which is shortly to appear. We may certainly credit him with having achieved this object; but there is much to be said in praise of the book on its own merits. True it is that his facts are chiefly derived from the "Johann Sebastian Bach" of Spitta already mentioned; but there is something in arranging these facts so as to engage the reader's attention, and in creating an interest by placing the composer vividly before us, instead of baldly cataloguing the several events of his life. The author is evidently an earnest student of Bach's works, and loves to linger over the career of one he so reverences. Those, therefore, who sympathetically peruse the pages of Mr. Poole's book cannot fail to derive both pleasure and profit from their contents; and we sincerely hope that the work will receive as extensive an appreciation as it deserves. Mr. Barrett is a recognised authority on the subject which he ably treats in the second of the two books before us. His remarks upon the characteristics of our national composers for the Church, show an intimate knowledge of their works; and much valuable information may be gained from his treatise, which has evidently been a labour of love with the author. We are glad to find that, amongst the volumes devoted to the lives of the "Great Musicians," one at least contains such a glorious list of English names as to convince the most sceptical that we can boast of a few eminent national composers.

The Musical Directory, Annual and Almanack for 1883. [Rudall, Carte and Co.]

THE late appearance of this Directory is accounted for by the occurrence of a fire on the premises of the printer of the work; and we trust, therefore, that this will not prove detrimental to the sale of a publication which has now been issued for thirty-one years. In every respect it is fully equal to its numerous predecessors; and indeed we may say that unusual care seems to have been used in collecting the addresses of members of the musical profession, for the status of whom—as we find that allusion has been made to the subject in a lecture by Mr. Monk—it is but fair to say that the Editor is by no means responsible.

Organ Music. By P. Wolfrum.

First Sonata, in B flat minor, Op. 1.

Second Sonata, in E, Op. 10.

Third Sonata, in F minor, Op. 14.

[Munich: Jos. Aibl; Novello, Ewer & Co.]

THESE Sonatas, speaking in a general way, show all the characteristics of the German style of composition. According to English ideas they are inclined to be heavy, and some would say dry; but the music is thoughtful, dignified, well suited to the instrument, and they would be considered fine voluntaries by many a cathedral organist. The choral forms a large and effective feature in several of the movements, while the two fugues (last movements of Sonatas 1 and 2) are both worthy of the attention of all earnest organ students.

What an Angel heard. Ballad.

The Thread of the Story. Ballad.

Words and Music by Louisa Gray.

[Duff and Stewart.]

THE composer of these songs writes well enough to render herself independent of authors who "supply" words for musical setting; and, although the poetry of the first ballad is somewhat conventional, the lines are full of human feeling, and the music, without much pretence to originality, is unforced and melodious. "The Thread of the Story" is a better song in every respect; the little tale upon which it is founded being well expressed both in words and notes. We may say, too, that in both these compositions the harmonies are always appropriate, and the accompaniments written with care and judgment.

Classical Compositions for the Organ. Nos. 1 & 2. By J. Wodehouse. [Weekes and Co.]

THE pieces included in the above-named numbers are arrangements consisting of "Angels ever bright and fair," Handel—"My heart ever faithful," Bach—"I waited for the Lord," Mendelssohn—"How beautiful are the feet," Handel. All these pieces have been very well arranged for the organ before, but we suppose there is no reason why they should not be done again. In the present instance they have been carefully adapted to organs of moderate pretensions, and are excellently printed.

Two Lovers. A Four-part Song. Poetry by George Eliot. Composed by Edward Hecht.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE exquisitely delicate treatment of this Part-song by the composer will demand equally delicate treatment from the vocalists; but where this can be ensured, there can be little doubt of the composition winning the sympathies of an audience. The changes from tonic minor to major give much effect to the varied feeling of the words; the concluding phrase of the song, especially, reflecting most faithfully the natural pathos of the climax. Mr. Hecht will enrich the art, as well as do honour to himself, by multiplying such specimens of healthy part-music.

March of the Heralds (and a movement from the Overture). From Professor Glover's Cantata, "St. Patrick at Tara." Arranged for the Organ by Seymour Kelly.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS is a composition of a very ordinary kind. In listening to the first theme, we are strongly reminded of a Gavotte or Bourrée by a well-known composer. We suppose the Professor is not responsible for the rather startling fifths in the first bar of this March. In our opinion they are of the worst kind, and we only trust that this work is not intended for use as a Church voluntary.

FOREIGN NOTES.

WE record on another page the death of Richard Wagner, which occurred on the 13th ult., at Venice, where he had been spending the winter months. The remains of the great tone-poet left Venice on the 17th ult. for Bayreuth, a large concourse of persons assembling in gondolas on the Grand Canal, to take their last farewell of the mortal remains of one who had shed such lustre upon the musical art. The coffin was placed in a black gondola, which was ornamented with four lions' heads. Wax tapers were burning in front, and a number of wreaths, including those forwarded by King Louis of Bavaria and King Humbert of Italy, besides floral offerings from societies, clubs, and private friends, almost filled the gondola. At the railway station a train, draped in black, was waiting to convey the body and the mourners to Vicenza, and thence by a special train they travelled direct to Bayreuth. During the journey whenever the train halted it was met by representatives of local musical societies, as well as by deputations from neighbouring towns, who presented laurel wreaths and other tokens expressive of their sense of the loss which musical art has sustained in the man to whose memory they were offered. Most of the intended special demonstrations had, however, to be dispensed with, in deference to the wish of the bereaved widow of the master, who accompanied the remains. On Sunday afternoon, the 19th ult., the funeral ceremonies took place at Bayreuth, in the presence of numerous deputations from all parts of Germany and Austria, and a multitude of people such as the small town of Bayreuth has probably never before witnessed. Speeches were made by the burgomaster of the town, as well as by Herr Feustel, in the name of the committee of management of the "Festspiele." The ceremonies produced a deep impression upon all present. Accompanied by the sounds of the noble funeral dirge known as "Siegfried's Tod," from the composer's "Götterdämmerung," and the singing of choral societies, the procession moved through the streets of Bayreuth—the silence of the spectators most eloquently expressing their heart-felt grief—to Wagner's Villa, styled by himself "Wahnfried," as being the abode where his ambition might be set at rest. In the garden of his villa, and opposite his working room, a mausoleum had been constructed by the composer, and here he was buried, the wreath sent to him by King Ludwig being the only one laid upon the tomb. A brief religious service preceded the interment; and we are told that the master's Newfoundland dog, during this touching ceremony, not only betrayed the utmost sorrow, but showed his sympathy with the members of the family by fawning upon them, as if he would wish to share their grief. Amongst the mourners were a number of well-known musical artists; but only a few were admitted into the garden, amongst whom were Herr Niemann and Herr Richter, two of the most eminent of the many identified with the master's work.

A correspondent writes from Vienna: "The news of the death of Richard Wagner has caused an intense feeling of regret here among his numerous admirers. The master was a well-known visitor here, for he had lived for some years at Pinzing, near Schönbrunn, and had moreover visited this capital from time to time for the purpose of conducting concerts and first performances of his operas. The 'Nibelungen' Trilogy was also first performed here after its production at Bayreuth. On the latter occasion it became most apparent who were the true supporters of the new German music-drama; for while in the boxes and in the stalls the demeanour of their respective occupants was decidedly cool, there were thunders of applause from the upper portions of the house, where students from the university, pupils from the Conservatoire, and other youthful enthusiasts were crowded together. In other words, youth and progress were distinctly on the side of the poet-composer. On the evening after Wagner's death 'Lohengrin' was performed here at the Hof-Theater with more than their usual zeal and earnestness on the part of the executants, while a feeling of reverence seemed to prevail among the entire audience. A special commemorative performance, in honour of the great deceased, is to take place in March."

A correspondent writes to us from the Hague: "The sixth Concert of the Diligenta Society here, which took place on February 14, was rendered memorable by the fact of its having included, for the first time, some of the music of Richard Wagner, M. Verhulst, the Conductor of the Society, having hitherto persistently refused to conduct the works of either Wagner or Berlioz. A meeting of members was called some time ago when a large majority decided in favour of the admission of the works of both masters into the programmes of the Society. In deference, however, to the artistic scruples of the conductor, M. Richard Hol, of Utrecht, had been asked to conduct on the present occasion, when the Prelude to 'Lohengrin' and the 'Huldigungs-Marsch,' together with Berlioz's overture 'Carnival Romain,' gave us the first taste of the hitherto forbidden fruit. To render the occasion still more special, the news of the sudden death of the great Bayreuth master reached us on the very day on which he was to hold his first entry into the Diligenta Society, and what, under any circumstances, would have been an enthusiastic display, was thus converted into a solemn demonstration. Wagner's portrait, surrounded by wreaths of immortelles, had been placed in front of the orchestra, and, in lieu of Beethoven's overture, 'Zur Weihe des Hauses,' the solemn strains of the Adagio from the same composer's 'Eroica' symphony worthily commenced the evening's proceedings. The selection, too, of the 'Lohengrin' prelude—perhaps Wagner's most idealistic production—appeared to be specially appropriate, under the circumstances, and produced a deep impression. Berlioz's above-named overture was received with some indifference. The programme also included some solo performances, vocal and instrumental. M. Hol conducted with much ability, and well deserves the gratitude of the musical public of this town, and of the Diligenta Society in particular."

The statistical order of productions of Wagner's works at the Vienna Hof-Theatre is as follows:—"Lohengrin," 181; "Tannhäuser," 157; "Der Fliegende Holländer," 121; "Die Meistersinger," 50; "Rienzi," 42; "Die Walküre," 42; "Siegfried," 17; "Das Rheingold," 14; and "Götterdämmerung," 10 times.

The first performance at Hamburg of M. Massenet's Opera "Hérodiade" appears to have been a complete success. The Hamburg correspondent of the Allgemeine Deutsche Musik Zeitung says: "It is a pleasure to meet again, at last, with a really dramatic musical talent such as Massenet undoubtedly possesses. . . . The applause, the laurel wreaths, and other ovations whereof the modest, retiring composer was the recipient, were, indeed, well merited, and will not be grudged to one who, in his own country, does not yet appear to have been recognised as a prophet."

The annual Music Festival of the Lower Rhine will be held this year at Cologne, under the conductorship of Ferdinand Hiller. Among the principal works to be performed are mentioned Haydn's "Creation," Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, and works by Bach, Brahms, and Bruch. Herr Brahms will probably be amongst the solo performers and play his second pianoforte concerto. Señor Sarasate is likewise expected to contribute to the programme of the Festival. There will be 600 choristers, with an orchestra of 120 executants.

The performance, for the first time at the Dresden Hof-theater, of Rubinstein's Opera "Die Maccabäer" has met with great success. Among the executive artists Fräulein Marianne Brandt, who sang the part of Leah, is said to have especially contributed to the favourable result of the performance.

Herr Joachim, in his capacity of director of the Berlin Hochschule, has engaged the services of the "Philharmonic" orchestra of that capital with a view to organising a series of twelve concerts during the present year in which a number of the pupils of the Hochschule are to take an active share.

Dr. von Bülow has recovered his usual health and vigour so completely that he was able to conduct a Symphony Concert in Meiningen on January 23, the programme of which consisted entirely of compositions of the late Joachim Raff.

Mr. Eugene D'Albert has met with great success in Berlin, and has played before the Empress and other Royal personages.

Professor Helmholz, the celebrated author of several books on the theory of music, has been knighted by the Emperor of Germany.

M. Gounod's sacred Trilogy "La Rédemption" was performed with great success in January last, by the "Maatschappij tot Bevordering der Toonkunst," of Rotterdam. The leading journal, the Nieuwe Rotterdamse Courant, contains a lengthy notice respecting the merits of the work, the third part whereof has found most favour with the critic in question, and seems likewise to have produced the greatest impression upon the audience. "The third part," says the journal alluded to, "will appear to most people the best. It is here where the stream of Gounod's wealth of melody flows on uninterruptedly. The opening chorus, 'Ah! qu'ils sont beaux sur la montagne,' belongs, on account also of its truly religious spirit, to the finest numbers in the score. No less beautiful is the orchestral paraphrase of the Prayer of the Apostles. . . . The elaborate final chorus of the work, again, with its fascinating motivi and masterly polyphonic treatment, furnishes abundant proof of a really surprising youthful freshness of invention on the part of a composer who is already well advanced in years." Respecting the performance itself, after bestowing praise upon the executants of the choral portions of the work, the journal quoted adds: "The solo parts, too, were well rendered. The music allotted to the first narrator could not have been intrusted to better hands than those of Herr Westberg, whose excellence as a vocalist we need not here further enlarge upon. For the second narrator (it was a happy idea on the part of the composer to assign the narrative portion to two voices) M. Henri Fontaine, of Paris, had been selected—a singer who, whilst not entirely free from a certain dulness of timbre which characterises French basses in general, possesses a good voice and declaims impressively. The music of the Saviour was well rendered by M. Seguin, of the Hague Opera, whilst the soprano and contralto parts were effectively sustained by Mlle. Kufferath, of Brussels, and a member of the Society respectively."

The first performance, on January 30, at Vienna, of M. Gounod's opera "Le Tribut de Zamora," was very successful, owing, in a great measure, to the splendid realisation on the part of Madame Pauline Lucca of the character of Hermosa, which is admitted on all sides to have been a veritable triumph of vocal and histrionic art. It is well known that Madame Lucca, on hearing the work last year at the Paris Grand Opera, was so much impressed with the part assigned to the heroine (then performed by Mlle. Krauss), that she determined to study it herself, and, of course easily prevailed upon the director of the Viennese Hof-Theater to afford her an early opportunity of adding another to the long series of operatic successes which this versatile artist has achieved. The work, which has been mounted with much care and taste, and was conducted by Hans Richter, will doubtless be frequently repeated during the season.

The Paris Le Figaro furnishes some hitherto unpublished details respecting the last hours of Chopin's life, which were communicated to the writer in that journal by the late M. Clésinger, the sculptor, who was on terms of great intimacy with the composer for many years. According to this account, some days previous to his death, Chopin had been removed to the salon of his apartments in the entresol of the house, No. 12, Place Vendôme. There was but little furniture in the room beyond a Pleyel grand-piano-forte. Kwiatkowski, Guttman, and Clésinger, had for some nights past been sitting up by turns with the dying man. It was about eight o'clock in the evening when the last moments approached. The composer was scarcely any longer able to speak. Casting his looks upon the beautiful Countess Delphine Potocka, he said faintly: "The Ave Maria, by Schubert." She understood his meaning, and sang the song referred to, Chopin holding Kwiatkowski's hand the while, pressing it from time to time, and whispering softly: "How beautiful, Mon Dieu, how beautiful is this!" Shortly before midnight he died.

Franz Liszt, having been requested to take part in the concert recently held in Paris on behalf of the inundated districts of Alsace-Lorraine, has written a letter to the Committee expressing his inability to assist on the occasion in question, and adding: "As a man of seventy-two I am, unfortunately, an invalid as regards pianoforte playing. I could not—at least, in public—risk the reputation of my ten fingers, unpractised as they have now been for years, without meeting with a certain fiasco. I have no doubt whatever on this point, and, having regard to my great age, am determined to abstain from playing in public altogether for the future."

Gustave Doré, the lately deceased painter, was also passionately fond of music, his favourite instrument having been the violin. He also possessed a good and well-trained tenor voice, which he frequently displayed at the interesting soirées held at his residence in the Rue Saint-Dominique in Paris, accompanied on the pianoforte by his brother, M. Ernest Doré, a composer of merit.

M. Ambroise Thomas's "Hamlet" was sung in Paris, on the 21st ult. for the two hundredth time. The occasion was signalled by the return to the stage of Madame Fidès Devries, who has accepted an engagement at the Grand Opera, at the high terms, for Paris, of £60 a night. The lady also stipulates for a minimum of six performances a month, and two months' holiday in the year.

The manuscript of an unpublished Symphony by Mendelssohn has been presented to the "Association Artistique" in Angers by a Monsieur Albert Cohen, of Paris. The letter which accompanied this present says that this work was written by Mendelssohn in his thirteenth year, and "dedicated to his dear friend E. R." (Ernst Rietz, brother of Julius Rietz, the late Dresden Conductor).

Another infant pianist, one Ernst Schelling, aged seven, has made his appearance at Paris, in a Concert given at the Salle Pleyel.

A new musical journal has been issued in Paris under the title of Musique Gazette, the editor being Ernst Dubreuil.

We have received the first numbers of a new weekly periodical published at Rome in the English language, and entitled The Roman News. The journal embraces the comprehensive interests of "politics, archaeology, fine arts, literature, and society," and is edited by Signor Luigi G. Mella.

Herr Max Bruch's visit to Boston, where he will conduct the Music Festival of the Handel and Haydn Society in May next, is looked forward to with eager interest in that town, which prides itself upon being the intellectual centre of the United States. Herr Bruch's Oratorio "Arminius" will be performed on the occasion referred to.

The Royal Opera House in Toronto (Canada) was entirely destroyed by fire on the 9th ult.

At Florence died, on January 8th, the well-known musical editor and publisher, G. G. Guidi, who has rendered valuable service to the art, by a long series of cheap and reliable editions of standard works.

The death is also announced at Bilbao, at the age of ninety-two, of Nicolas Ledesma, a well-known Spanish composer of church music.

We subjoin, as usual, the programmes of concerts recently given at some of the leading institutions abroad:—

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

BELFAST.—Mr. W. F. W. Jackson, M.B.O., Organist of Holyrood Parish Church, gave a most successful Pianoforte and Organ Recital, in the Ulster Hall, on Friday, January 26. The programme was divided into sections representing ecclesiastic, operatic, drawing-room, and concert music. The third Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society was given in the Ulster Hall on the 9th ult. The programme consisted of Mr. Macdonald's Cantata The Bride and a miscellaneous selection. The solo vocalists were Miss De Fonblanque, Madame Trebelli, Mr. Frank Boyle, and Signor Ghiberti. Mr. Musin contributed violin solos, which were highly appreciated. The chorus-singing was exceedingly good, and reflected great credit on Herr Beyschlag, the Conductor.

BELPER.—On Thursday evening, the 15th ult., the Musical Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's Athalie, and a miscellaneous programme, in the Public Hall, with band and chorus of sixty reformers. Mr. T. B. Mellor, Organist of Bukewell Parish Church, conducted, and Mr. A. H. Mellor, Director of Music, Farnboro' School, presided at the organ. The solo vocalists were Miss Fannie Bristowe and Miss Fannie Lynn, R.A.M.; and Miss Frost and Miss Hye, two members of the Society. The music was rendered in a highly creditable manner, much of the success being due to the energy and judgment displayed by the Conductor.

BRIDPORT.—The first Concert of the newly formed Choral Association took place at the Drill Hall, on Wednesday, January 31, under the conductorship of Mr. J. Hopkins. A miscellaneous programme was well rendered. The solo vocalists were Miss Gill, Mrs. Spencer, Mr. Dunn, Mr. T. Matthews, Mr. Hopkins, Mr. W. Newberry and Mr. Falk.

BURNLEY.—A most interesting Lecture on the Violin was given on the 6th ult., by Mr. Crompton, a well-known violinist, who exhibited specimens of the instrument by the greatest makers, and also a violoncello by Carlo Bergonzi. Mr. Crompton dwelt largely on the structure of the violin, which he described as one of those few things that have been brought to perfection. At the close of the lecture some movements from quartets of Haydn were performed.

BURY ST. EDMUNDS.—On Tuesday, January 30, an evening Concert was given, in the Athenæum Hall, by Mr. E. A. Sydenham (Organist and Choirmaster of St. James's Church), which was generously attended. The vocalists were Miss Gould, the Rev. — Griffiths, Messrs. Salmon, Haines, Sydenham, Bevan, and Frederick Pattle; instrumentalists, Mrs. Henry, Dr. Henry, Mr. Pratt, and Mr. Geo. Pratt. The programme included several songs composed expressly for the occasion by the beneficiaire, which met with a good reception, as did also the same composer's part-song "Tel-el-Kebr," which was sung with great precision by the choir.

CHEL TENHAM.—Mr. J. A. Matthews's Choral and Orchestral Society gave the last Concert for the season, in the Assembly Rooms, on Tuesday evening, the 13th ult., when Mendelssohn's Elijah was performed. The principal vocalists were Miss Julia Jones, Miss Emily Jones, Mr. Alfred Kenningham, and Mr. Montague Worlock; the Misses Neate, Bucknell, A. Martin and Mr. Twinning assisting in the quartets. Mr. Matthews conducted, and the band was led by Mr. E. G. Woodward.

CHICHESTER.—Mr. Seymour Kelly gave his Annual Concert, on January 31, before a crowded audience. The artists engaged were Miss Marian McKenzie, A.R.A.M., the Misses Fanny and Alice Osmond, Messrs. J. Wenham, Walker, C. E. Pillow, and S. Kelly, vocalists; Signor Bellizzi, soloist; Mr. Ernest Fowler, solo piano; and Mr. Edward Bartlett, accompanist.

CLAYTON-LE-MOORS.—A Concert was given in the Mechanics' Institute, Pickers Street, on Monday evening, the 12th ult., under the auspices of the Clifton Foresters' Football Club. An excellent miscellaneous programme was well rendered by Miss Bessie Holt, Mr. M. Ingham, Mr. H. W. Varley, Mr. Alfred Sharples, and Mr. R. Moorhouse, vocalists; accompanist, Mr. W. T. Bleasdale.

CLIFTON.—Mr. W. Haydn Cox, Organist of the Parish Church, gave an Organ Recital at the Victoria Rooms, on Tuesday, the 6th ult., at a large meeting held there in connection with the church. The programme consisted of Organ Concert No. 6, in B flat (Händel), Minuet and Trio from the Concerto in minor (Scherzade Bennett), Adagio in D major (Smart), Andante in G (encored) (Battiste), Pastorale (Lefebvre-Wely), and March from Eli (Costa).—On Thursday evening, the 8th ult., a vocal and instrumental Concert was given at the Alexandra Hall. The vocalists were Miss Marie Gane, Mrs. Cumberland, Mr. Bazeley, and Rev. F. Hichens; solo violin, Miss Nora Peache. Pianoforte duets were excellently performed by the Misses Peache. Several part-songs were given with good effect by a glee party. Miss Nora Peache's violin solo and Miss Marie Gane's song received enthusiastic encores.

DUNDEE.—On Thursday evening, the 15th ult., the Chapelshade Musical Association gave its first Concert in the Kinnaird Hall, under the leadership of Mr. John Sim, Organist and Graduate of the Tonic Sol-fa Society. The soloists were good, and Mr. Sim proved himself a very efficient Conductor. In the choruses the tenors were a little weak, but on the whole the Concert went off admirably, and both choir and Conductor made a very successful début. The audience was a large one, and apparently much enjoyed the programme.

DURHAM.—A Concert, in aid of the County Hospital, was given on Tuesday evening, January 23, in the Town Hall, by Mr. Algernon Ashton. The feature of the Concert was the performance, by Mr. Ashton, of his own compositions, which were received with the warmest applause. Mr. Thorne also played successfully a gavotte by Dr. Arne. Miss Ashton and Mr. Northwick were the solo vocalists, Duets and trios being contributed by local amateurs.

EXETER.—A series of musical events of a most interesting description took place in the Victoria Hall, under the auspices of the Western Counties Musical Association, on Wednesday, January 31. In the afternoon four bands competed for two prizes of £10 and £5, it being stipulated that these contests should take place between orchestras from localities in the western counties in union with the Association. In the evening the contest was by choirs numbering from 12 to 24 voices, for prizes of £10 and £5, and an extra prize of £5 to the choir (not being first in the main contest) which successfully passed the test of singing one concerted piece at sight selected by the judge, conducted, and chord only given. Mr. George Riseley, Organist of Bristol Cathedral, was the adjudicator. The first prize was awarded to Mr. Russe, Conductor of the Tiverton Band, and the second to Mr. Moore, Conductor of the Exeter Band. The first prize for the choirs was awarded to Exeter, and the second to Tiverton, but the sight-singing of the other choirs was not sufficiently good for the extra prize to be awarded.

GLOUCESTER.—An excellent Concert was given at the Shire Hall, on the 1st ult., for the benefit of Mr. John Hunt, whose services in the cause of music are well known to all the residents of the city; and it is gratifying to record that the performance was attended by a large audience. The principal vocalists were Miss Kate Hardy, Miss Agnes Wilson, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Hirwen Jones, and Mr. W. H. Breton; the instrumentalists being Miss Annie Ward, a pupil of Mr. Carrouds—whose performance of two violin solos created a marked effect—and Mr. A. H. Brewer (organ). The part-music was effectively rendered by the Choral Society. Mr. Hunt conducted, and Mr. Brewer and Mr. F. Higgs (turn presiding at the pianoforte), Master Mills lending assistance in the duet accompaniment to one chorus.—The second Concert for the season of the Choral Society, took place at the Shire Hall on the 20th ult., when Handel's Messiah was performed. The solos were sung by Miss De Fonblanque, Miss Winthrop, Miss Matthias, Mr. Fredericks and Mr. Brandon. Mr. J. Hunt conducted and Mr. C. L. Williams presided at the organ. There was a string band of about twenty-four performers, including several lady violinists, under the leadership of Mr. E. G. Woodward.

CAUTION—THE ONLY LEGAL—CAUTION
PATENT ACTION
 FOR ATTACHING ORGAN PEDALS TO A PIANOFORTE IN
A VERY VALUABLE IMPROVEMENT.

It is with pleasure Mr. Ainsworth announces a very valuable improvement just added to his Action. The great advantage secured from his improvement is that the Organ Pedals can be taken away from the Pianoforte at pleasure.

TEN REASONS WHY AINSWORTH'S ACTION IS PREFERRED.

First: It is the only Action which has perfect, invariable, and convenient adjustments. Second: The whole thirty notes on pedals can be adjusted to an evenness unsurpassed on the Pianoforte keyboard. Third: It can be attached to any Pianoforte or Pianette in one half the time of any other. Fourth: It is the only Action which does not deteriorate the touch of the Pianoforte, and it is a very great improvement on roller board actions, as it obviates the use of weights and springs entirely, and will never get out of order. Fifth: It is the only Action which possesses the advantage of allowing the Organ Pedals to be detached from the Pianoforte at will. Sixth: It draws down the keys in the most natural manner, and with the greatest ease, thereby ensuring absolute immunity from any extra wear of the Pianoforte whatever. Seventh: It is unauxiliated for quick response to the lightest pedal touch. Eighth: A more accurate repetition could not be obtained, it is quite equal to that of the Pianoforte. Ninth: It is carefully finished, and all the moving parts supplied with noiseless cushions, and is perfectly noiseless when actuated. Tenth: It is the most durable and perfect Action extant, and will give satisfaction when all others have failed.

The inventor and patentee kindly requests members of the musical profession and trade to apply to him for drawings, full and explicit explanations, also prices of this the only Patent Action for attaching organ pedals to a Pianoforte, also prices of organ pedals, which are charged cost price only.

Highest testimonials from purchasers and others, and the Action supplied on approval. Liberal discount allowed to the profession and trade.

VIOLINS, VIOLAS, VIOLONCELLOS, AND DOUBLE-BASSES

BY

CRASKE.

THESE are the very best of all modern Violins, some of them fifty and sixty years old, perfect reproductions of the great masters, and equal to them in tone, workmanship, and varnish. Some of them have been sold by unprincipled dealers as genuine Cremonas for very high prices, and some fairly on their own merits for as much as £240.

No man, unassisted, ever made so many Violins as "CRASKE." In addition to what he made for Forster, Dodd, and Mr. Clementi, he finished with his own hands over 2,000 Violins, 250 Violas, 250 Violoncellos, and 20 Double-Basses.

After a long and indefatigable industry Mr. Craske retired from business on an income of nearly £1,000 per annum, derived from investments in the Manchester Corporation Water Works.

The principal part of his life was spent in London, Bath, Birmingham (where he kept a shop on Snow Hill about twenty years), and Stockport, near Manchester; making also short residences in Leeds, Manchester, and Salford.

Before his retirement, Mr. Crompton bought the whole of his stock, and now has it for sale at 54, Barton Arcade, Manchester, along with a large collection of almost every noted make of Italian instruments. Manchester, April 14, 1881.

IMPROVED ORGAN PEDALS & ACTION
FOR PIANOFORTES.J. HAMILTON,
FIRST INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER.

Brinscall (near Chorley).
Sir,—I received the pedals and action yesterday, and have got it attached to my pianoforte. I must say that its utility and usefulness exceed all my expectations; it is perfectly noiseless, and just what every organist or any one wishing for pedal practice at home ought to have. I should have had a set of your pedals years ago had I known they acted so well.—I remain, yours most truly,
To Mr. J. Hamilton, J. AINSWORTH, Prof. Music.

The Orchestra and Choir for May says: "We have had an opportunity of testing the efficiency of the Pedals for Pianofortes supplied by Mr. Hamilton, of Bristol. Their finish could not be better, and the simplicity and noiselessness of the Action is a great thing in their favour, as well as the ease with which they can be attached, and the fact that they do not injure the instrument in any way."
The Action is easily attached to any kind of Pianoforte in a short time.

A Set of Straight Pedals and Action (30 notes), price £4.4s.
A Set of Radiating and Concave Pedals and Action (30 notes), price £5 5s.

A Set of Straight and Concave Pedals, as recommended at the Organ Conference, 1881, and Action, price £5 5s.

Full printed instructions, "How to Attach," are sent with each set. Liberal discount to the Trade and Profession. Agent—Mr. Arthur F. Adcock, 4, Gladstone Terrace, Bolan Street, Battersea Bridge Road, S.W. Send for testimonials and terms to

THE HOLY CITY

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"The work is an honour to English Art, and has elevated its composer into a place of distinction amongst native musicians."—Queen.

"A good sound musical work is this 'Holy City.' I have no hesitation in saying that it creditably represents English art, and does honour not only to the skill but to the judgment and taste of Mr. Gaul."—Daily Telegraph.

"The reception was favourable in the extreme, and the Cantata must henceforth be classed among the successes which the Birmingham Musical Festivals have brought to light."—Standard.

"The 'Holy City' is evidently the work of a thoughtful as well as a clever composer, and should make its mark among thoroughly English productions of a sacred character."—Musical Times.

"We hope and believe that the reception given last night to Mr. Gaul and to his 'Holy City' Cantata will prove an earnest of its popularity and acceptance throughout the length and breadth of the land."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"A most interesting, tuneful, and scholarly work."—Manchester Courier.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR

NEW PART-SONG. PRICE 3d.

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

This Part-Song, written for, and dedicated to, the Kyle Society, is laid out in Mr. Gaul's very best manner, and while recalling, for its beautiful effects, his elegant Part-Song, "The silent land," the resemblance begins and ends there. Mr. Gaul knows to the very letter the capabilities of the voices he writes for, and one is perfectly safe, even after a single experience only, in predicting a widespread popularity to "The children's hour."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

JASON

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE POEM WRITTEN BY

WILLIAM GRIST

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

A. C. MACKENZIE.

Octavo, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.

TIMES.

"Mr. A. C. Mackenzie's Cantata 'Jason,' which was the most important feature of to-night's Concert, and the only absolute novelty of the entire Festival, is not unworthy of so prominent a position. It is not only the most extensive choral work attempted by the young and promising composer, but it also illustrates the new development of the English school of music, which has been coincident with the growing taste for the higher aspects of the art in this country, supply meeting demand in this as in other cases. Mr. Mackenzie is in every sense a modern composer. There is in his music no trace of the slavish imitation of Mendelssohn which, for years after the death of that great composer, impeded the progress of any national or independent growth of musical art among us. . . . How the composer has accomplished his task of illustrating the action I cannot for the present explain at such length as the music deserves."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"An orchestral intermezzo, 'On the waters,' represents the voyage from Hellas to Colchis. This is a charming number, orthodox as to form, and poetic in spirit as though the composer of 'Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage' had written it. Indeed, Mendelssohn could not have been far from Mr. Mackenzie when he conceived this fresh and breezy music."

STANDARD.

"The Cantata of 'Jason' is not only his most pretentious, but also his most successful, work. Its bright, melodious numbers will, in all probability, soon become popular. 'Jason' is described as a dramatic Cantata for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra. It is exceedingly clever in construction, and the orchestration is peculiarly picturesque in places."

DAILY CHRONICLE.

"'Jason' is a composition characterised by vivid imagination, grace, and power, and it marks a further advance upon the road on which Mr. Mackenzie has already made such satisfactory progress. The Cantata left a great impression upon the audience, and the composer was heartily greeted at the conclusion from all parts of the hall."

ATHENÆUM.

"We regret that our space will not allow us to analyse 'Jason' in detail. Mr. Mackenzie's style, though not free from signs of the influence of Schumann and Wagner, shows considerable individuality; of direct reminiscences there are very few. Among the best portions of his new work are the vigorous and spirited opening chorus, broken by a charming tenor solo; the chorus, 'See, the All-father approves from above'; the following intermezzo for orchestra, entitled 'On the Waters,' a lovely instrumental picture of which any living composer might be proud; Medea's scena; the duet between herself and Jason; the chorus of armed men; and the whole finale."

WEEKLY DISPATCH.

"It may be premature to express so decided an opinion, but I am inclined to think 'Jason' is the finest Cantata ever penned by an English composer. It is not only scholarly in a high sense, but is written with a freedom of resource and a command over the various forms of expression not often equalled. The choruses are splendid, the melodies generally striking and unconventional, and the orchestration is exceedingly rich and varied."

CHARLES HALLÉ'S "PRACTICAL PIANOFORTE SCHOOL."

SECTION II.—"EASY."

SECTION III.—"MODERATELY DIFFICULT."
SECTION IV.—"DIFFICULT."

SECTION V.—"VERY DIFFICULT."

SPECIAL NOTICE FOR THE NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION.

FORSYTH BROTHERS have great pleasure in drawing attention to the New and Enlarged Edition of Charles Hallé's "Practical Pianoforte School." A great desire having been expressed that Mr. Hallé should make Sections 1 and 2 more extended, he has added sixteen New Numbers, consisting of Airs and Melodies arranged by himself, three Pieces written expressly at his request by Stephen Heller and Ferdinand Hiller, and other favourite works. He has also enlarged and re-arranged the Pianoforte Tutor, making it the best and most useful Tutor ever published. The first three Sections have been re-engraved in the same improved style as Sections 4 and 5, making the whole work uniform, and as complete as the best engraving, printing, and paper can make it.

PREFACE TO THE NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION.

THE great success of the "Practical Pianoforte School" having made it necessary to engrave new Plates, I have taken the advantage of it to correct the few misprints which, in spite of the utmost care, had crept into the former Edition; and, in compliance with the suggestions received from many eminent Teachers, have considerably enlarged the First and Second Sections, earnestly wishing that the usefulness of the work may thereby be still further increased.

CHARLES HALLÉ.

E. PAUER'S

BIRTHDAY BOOK OF MUSICIANS AND COMPOSERS.

Cloth, gilt edges, 3s.; Leather, gilt edges, 4s.

THIS elegant little book contains upwards of 500 dates and places of the births and deaths of the most celebrated, influential, and popular Composers, Singers, Instrumentalists, Musical Historians, Archaeologists, Authors, and Critics, with a short account of their lives and reference to their chief works. In the place of poetical extracts, used in the well-known Shakespeare, Tennyson, Longfellow, or Scriptural Birthday Books, more than 450 brief but highly interesting paragraphs are given, so that every day of the year may be musically associated with an unusual amount of information in a compact and agreeable form. These 450 paragraphs have been carefully selected from the biographies, letters, and essays of the most celebrated ancient and modern Musicians and Authors of England, France, Germany, and Italy, and illustrate every phase and feature of Musical Art. This little book is at once a useful and practical book of reference and a highly valuable book of information. A carefully prepared table of contents facilitates the finding of the respective dates, while its elegant appearance and convenient size especially recommend it as a useful, attractive, and acceptable gift.

CHALLEN & SON'S IRON-FRAME PIANOS

Have received the following Awards at the International Exhibitions of LONDON, 1862.—PRIZE MEDAL for "excellence of action and tone."
SOUTH AFRICA, 1877.—GOLD MEDAL for the best Pianette (the highest Award ever given for this class of Piano).
PARIS, 1878.—The MEDAILLE D'HONNEUR for "good and cheap Pianos" (great excellence combined with moderate cost).
MELBOURNE, 1881.—GOLD MEDAL for excellence of quality combined with solidity of construction.

IRON-FRAME PIANOS.

A system of construction which, by a careful application of scientific principles, Messrs. CHALLEN & SON have brought to great perfection, is now generally acknowledged as the only one calculated to render the Piano almost impervious to the deleterious influences of damp and extremes of temperature, while it stands better in tune with one-fourth of the usual tuning—a most important consideration where tuners are not readily obtained. The inestimable advantages thus secured are augmented by an increased power and purity of tone hitherto unattainable in the Upright Piano.

A selection from numerous testimonials will be a sufficient guarantee of the excellence of the Pianos manufactured by this Firm:—

Hawthorn Lodge, January, 1882.

Having used one of your Pianos a great deal for studying music as well as singing, I can with pleasure testify to the fact that they possess a very fine tone and sustain the voice admirably. I have used Pianos by all the leading manufacturers, but I consider your instruments fully equal in every respect to any made, and I shall take every opportunity of recommending them.—Yours truly,

MARIE ROZE,

Prima Donna of Her Majesty's Opera.

I consider that Messrs. CHALLEN & SON have succeeded in providing, at a most moderate cost, Pianos of high-class workmanship and pure tone. Their Pianettes are specially deserving of notice in being remarkable both for their cheapness and general excellence. The instruments exhibited by Messrs. CHALLEN & SON in Paris were highly creditable, not only to them but to the English Section.

JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus. Doc., Hon. R.A.M., F.C.O.,
English Furore at the Paris Universal Exhibition, 1878.

The Pianos of Messrs. CHALLEN & SON possess every good quality. They are exceedingly moderate in price, and I can testify, from personal experience, to their great durability.

GEORGE GARRETT, M.A., Mus. Doc., Cantab.

Brackley Villa, Dulwich.

I have on several occasions selected Pianos from Messrs. CHALLEN & SON, and have great pleasure in stating they have invariably given complete satisfaction, some of them having had to bear the severe test of an Indian climate.

can be little doubt of its efficacy."—MUSICAL TIMES. Price (Violin), 5s. per set; Single Peg (as sample), 1s. 6d.

TAILPIECE.—To facilitate stringing, and to lessen the strain on the knot of the string, this tailpiece has its four slots on the front, or bridge-end, and behind each of these is firmly fixed a metal stud, around which the string is looped after being placed in its slot.

Price (Violin) 2s. 6d.

SPHERIC RESIN AND CASE.—To render Resin convenient and clean in use it is shaped into a ball, and placed in a similarly shaped box, the inside diameter of which is a little in excess of that of the Resin. Through this case is cut a slot of suitable width and length to receive the bow-hair, and opposite it a round finger-hole, provided with a diaphragm to hinder contact of the finger with the Resin whilst being forced up against the slot. It will at once be seen that many advantages are gained by this spheric arrangement, notably: absence of detached parts; impossibility of bow-hair being caught between resin and case; a fresh surface presented to every application of the bow-hair; cannot fret into notches; hair spreads on surface; secure from fracture, &c., &c. The outside skin or scale of each sphere is ground off, consequently the bow-hair readily takes from it at first application. Price 2s.

READY THIS DAY.

HARMONY

BY

CARL MANGOLD.

THE MUSICAL WORLD says:—

"This concise little treatise commences with the utmost simplicity. The student is tempted to use his musical gifts, however small, from the very outset; begins to compose at once, and is assured that in the algebra of sound he need not, as he feared, forego his imagination, and that his ear may be pressed into the service. Encouraged, he is launched into Harmony and Counterpoint without realising his position, and is taken with a somewhat subtle skill over musical pontes asinorum until he suddenly awakes to find himself actually a harmonist, ready for examination, minus the cramming process. The method by which this result is brought about is novel, and, to the initiated, as profitable as it is interesting."

FIGARO says:—

"A new manual of 'Harmony' just published by Messrs. W. Morley and Co. of Regent Street, merits a few words of notice. It is from the pen of Mr. Carl Mangold, the well-known professor of harmony at the Guildhall School of Music and musical instructor of the Duchess of Teck. The most important features of the little two shilling book are its conciseness and the absolute clearness with which the explanations and definitions are given. Some works on Harmony are so abstruse that the puzzled student soon throws up the whole affair in despair. Mr. Carl Mangold's object seems to have been to interest as well as to enlighten, and the little manual will be most useful for school and class work."

"The easiest and best work on Harmony yet published."

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

APRIL 1, 1883.

WAGNER'S WORK AND INFLUENCE.

Few men of genius have existed who in their lifetime have provoked in the language of criticism more of the distemperature of passion than Richard Wagner. This provocation proceeded almost as much from his polemical writings as from the heterodoxy of his theories and practice in music. Another important factor in the great conflict of controversy that followed the appearance of "Tannhäuser" is to be found in the injudicious statements of certain partisans. To attempt to justify either the extravagance of the latter or the detractions of their opponents would be to condone with what is best forgotten—if possible. There seems to be something in the life and work of Wagner that provokes irritation and combativeness, even among critics of well-known geniality and breadth of view. What is this inherent force which has transformed the field of critical inquiry into a field of battle, and which has provoked as much mischief as the presence of the Goddess of Discord in the garden of the Hesperides? It can be finally traced in the Titanic personality of the composer himself. The overpowering individuality of Wagner escapes no one, however slightly conversant with his life and work. It permeates all his writings and all his compositions. The man, whether as polemic or composer, is always present to our conscience, and with a vivid sense that cannot be denied. If this were true only of his controversial writings there would be nothing notable in it. It is not so, however. He was always en scène. There is something in this ever-obtruded personality so characteristic of the untiring self-assertion of Wagner, which is in itself provocative of aggressiveness in others. Strong natures, such as his, naturally generate strong partisans, and partisanship may be beneficial to art when it springs from pure disinterested enthusiasm and is worthily directed to worthy ends. But it is more defensible in artists, and should never replace the deliberate judgment of the critic, who, if once he become a mere partisan, degrades his office.

It is unfortunate that at the present time there exist too many signs that the question of Wagner's work and influence is not likely to receive much temperate investigation. There has been a species of hollow truce merely, and the tomahawk is but half buried. In spite, however, of the apparent renewal of the bitter strife of polemics, the present is as opportune a time as any for a dispassionate survey of the question. In the first place, with respect to what were Wagner's theoretical aims, and to what extent he subsequently realised them, it must be confessed that they suffered fully as much from the interpretation of over-zealous followers as from the unwisdom of his own procedure of advocacy. Had he been content merely to exemplify the ever-growing strength of his theories in his compositions without inditing a line of controversy, his works would, we believe, have taken the same high position they now do, and the ears of the world would have been unaffected with much unseemly cacophony in the shape of pamphlets and letters. This was the course pursued by Beethoven, a genius fully as revolutionary as Wagner, whose grandest compositions have only in our own time received anything approaching just recognition, and who yet, when told during his last illness that one of his quartets did not please, calmly remarked, "It will please some day." At the outset of Wagner's career there was much in the aspect of dramatic music to encourage the lofty hopes and noble aspirations of the young composer. To assert, however, that in composing "Rienzi" he was not obeying his true instincts, but merely endeavouring to obtain a basis for more revolutionary operations, is paying but an indifferent compliment to the artist, however pleasing a tribute it may have been to the astuteness of the man. Yet such was the interpretation made of the appearance of that phenomenal and meretricious opera by some of Wagner's most devoted adherents when its incongruity contrasted painfully with subsequent and maturer productions. The truth is that Wagner in his youth, like other great composers, was naturally influenced by the example of his most successful and popular contemporary. He was acquainted with the splendours of the spectacular drama of Meyerbeer, and he naturally attempted something of the same genre. That he did not repeat the experiment in the face of its success shows that he early became possessed of the germs of those theories which were afterwards to make him famous, and that he had already determined upon their demonstration.

But although the progress towards a lofty ideal is shown to an astonishing degree in his three following works, Wagner had not as yet obtained a clear view of his ideal future. He had, indeed, in giving "Lohengrin" to a German audience, aimed a deadly blow at the spurious native opera then in vogue, but he did not in that beautiful work do more than indicate the path he was about to enter, and dimly forecast the glorious vision he had ever before him. This was nothing less than to restore to modern dramatic music the ancient signification music possessed for the Greeks, and which, of course, embraced an intimate union of all the arts. There is something so tremendous and imposing in this aim that it is not surprising that it fascinated many minds not naturally susceptible to the influences of music. It explains in a great measure the widespread interest taken in Wagner's views by men whose work has been in other fields of art. The influence he exercised, through the mere pronunciation of this grandiose scheme, upon the imagination of artists generally is something unique. It is an eloquent proof of his indomitable will and unequalled personal influence that, in spite of immense discouragement, he succeeded in obtaining a new theatre specially constructed for his purpose. It is true that this building was in its arrangements very far from recalling the antique theatre. Instead of possessing the absolute simplicity of the Athenian stage, with its open-air scene of the surrounding plain, or little strip of the Ægean Sea, or the baldest interior, the Wagnerian stage commanded all the resources of modern art, scenic and mechanical. Here was a striking divergence. Again, while Wagner made, in one sense, an admirable choice of subject for dramatic representation in the "Nibelung's Ring," he subjected himself to a disadvantage from which the Æschylean tragedy was free. The wisdom of his choice lay in its natural greatness and national scope; but among the Greeks the general orthodox belief of the audience in the mythical element of their lyrical drama made illusion perfect even without scenery, whereas the modern ethical standard is something so opposed to the faith and morals held by the Scandinavians that the art of Shakespeare himself would be strained to create an interest in that which possesses no appeal to humanity nor any human interest. The burden of dramatic exposition thus greatly devolves upon the orchestra, and undue importance is attached to mere mechanical effects.

Hence the darkened theatre, the hidden orchestra, the steam effects, the dragon, and other wonders and devices to flatter the senses at the expense of the intellect. We should not attach so much importance to these discrepancies if some such comparison had not been challenged—if Wagner's dramas had not repeatedly been styled great literary productions by some in authority, and he himself a great dramatist. Let it be fully conceded that Wagner's music, particularly in "Tristan und Isolde," is often remarkably dramatic; too often, however, are the finest situations marred by an unhappy lack of dramatic instinct in the writer. It would seem as if there were two distinct personalities in Wagner—the musician, who is fully possessed by the grandeur of his subject, and the littérateur, who frequently is irresistibly damaging. Without referring further to the dreary prolixity of the declamatory résumés of Wotan in the Nibelung tetralogy let us take an instance of this from "Tristan und Isolde." It is the magnificent scene where Brangäne rushes into the garden of King Mark and warns the lovers of the approach of daylight. All who have witnessed the scene that follows need not be reminded of the superlative beauty of the music, and the strength of the incident of the discovery of the lovers by King Mark. Instead of pursuing the dictates of the most ordinary dramatic feeling and finishing the scene at once, an anticlimax is arrived at in a speech from King Mark of almost insufferable redundancy, wholly iterative and unnecessary, and which nullifies the striking incident preceding it. The dramatic writings of Wagner abound in instances as glaring as this, and that their author should ever have been regarded as a great dramatist is a surprising proof of the lengths to which special pleading will go.

It needs little reasoning, indeed, to demonstrate that there is a wide gulf fixed between Wagner's theories, and his practical exemplification of them, novel and distinct from all other work in opera as this undoubtedly is. Without any malicious arrière pensée it may be said that Wagner was debarred from the perfect realisation of his theories, because his ideal of their realisation was impossible. The union of all the arts in representation; so that they are all mutually and equally operative, may be imaginatively depicted by the poet, but the hope of viewing such a consummation on the dry stage is purely visionary. Wagner's work in music is so individual and so distinguished, his position among the great composers so unassailable, that it is quite superfluous to make on his behalf any claims to divinity. We have alluded to his personal influence, and the interest his great career has excited outside the musical world. The influence of his compositions has for the last twenty years been continuously exercised over most of his contemporaries and is clearly apparent. The "new Art" which he bequeathed to the world resolves itself into this, that he established a new form of opera so different from others that it is most appropriately described by his own designation "music-drama." It would be presumptuous to speak of this as a "new Art," for that would be to infer that none of Wagner's predecessors or contemporaries had perceived the necessity of reconstructing opera or had introduced any beneficial innovations, and, moreover, that his theories absolutely originated with him. This, we know, is far from being the case. The art-work of Richard Wagner should be regarded not apart from, but in connection with, that of other great composers; we should even then discover in it qualities precious enough to make us deplore the utterances of fanaticism whether exhibited in praise or blame.

"ELIJAH"

A COMPARISON OF THE ORIGINAL AND REVISED SCORES

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

(Concluded from page 125.)

PART II.

No. 41—Chorus, "But the Lord from the north hath raised one."

Mendelssohn altered many details in the orchestration of this number, with a view, apparently, to greater dignity of effect. None of them, however, are important enough to call for notice here. But at the tenth bar from the end of the present version we come upon a very important change. The original has a different ending altogether, as the following example shows:—

No. 1. VOICES, unison.

And of the fear of the Lord.

Strings.

Wind.

Moreover, this half close is followed by a somewhat extended movement, Alla breve moderato, in the same key, and having the form of an accompanied canon at the octave, four in one. We give the voice parts below, with such few indications of the accompaniment as are needful in a case where the instruments chiefly strengthen the vocal harmony. It may be premised that the words are the well-known Scriptural passage, "He will open the eyes of the blind," &c.:—

No. 2. SOPRANO.

Orchestra.

The choral-like form of the theme above employed suggests inquiry whether the composer borrowed it from Church song, and it may be that some of our readers can solve the doubt on this point.

No. 42—Quartet, "O come, every one that thirsteth."

In this number Mendelssohn very slightly touched the soprano part at one place only, and, removing an oboe from the score, substituted a clarinet, without, however, changing a note of the music.

No. 43—Chorus, "And then shall your light."

The Andante maestoso which now opens the final chorus was written after the Birmingham performance, and took the place of an Andante sostenuto in the same key twenty-two bars long. From the voice parts given below it will be seen that the composer anticipated the subject of his closing fugue. The wind instruments are impressively used in sustained harmony throughout this Andante, while the strings have a syncopation indicated in the first bar of our extract:—

No. 3. Andante sostenuto.

for us, do all things more than we can ask, can ask or think. To Him be glo-ry throughout all time, yea, to Him be glo-ry with-out end, To Him be glo-ry throughout all time, yea, to Him be glo-ry with-out end. A - men, A - men, A - men.

Coming to the fugue it is seen that Mendelssohn gives a crowning proof of his dissatisfaction with the original work, and his resolve to spare no pains for its amendment. The movement in the original, though having the same subject as that in the printed score, is substantially different from its successor, and a comparison of the two conveys so much interest and profit that we cannot refuse the reader an opportunity of making it. The Birmingham fugue is, therefore, appended in its entirety. Its connected words are a portion of those used in the preceding Andante sostenuto—viz., "To Him be glory throughout time," &c.:—

No. 4. Allegro vivace.

Our task is now ended, and, for the first time in the history of the oratorio, the changes made by Mendelssohn have been set forth with sufficient particularity for a just estimate of their extent and character. As regards the composer, we can now judge, not only his fastidiousness, but his undaunted resolve that no labour should be spared to strengthen weak points. We learn also the value of second thoughts, and the fact that even genius requires many such for the perfecting of a great work of art. Mendelssohn, in "Elijah," reached the "Temple of the Sun," but his Pegasus was a slow and plodding beast. This should be at once a warning and an encouragement.

THE GREAT COMPOSERS

BY JOSEPH BENNETT.

No. XII.—ROSSINI (concluded from page 131).

ROSSINI remained in Bologna from 1836 to 1847, and during all that long time did nothing except complete his "Stabat Mater," under circumstances presently to be mentioned, and write three religious choruses—"La Foi," "L'Espérance," and "La Charité"—only the third of which was absolutely new. Still, it cannot be said that he idled away those eleven years of vigorous manhood. He took quite a fatherly interest in the Communal Lyceum at Bologna, and became not only the honorary, but, in effect, the acting director of that establishment, lifting it, if Azevedo may be credited, to the highest position in Italy as a school of music. It was there he marked the rising talent of Marietta Alboni, and there he trained her to become the acknowledged best exponent of his contralto rôles. Rossini's activity in these respects, however, went for little with the public. As year succeeded year, and "Guillaume Tell" remained without a successor, "all the world wondered." Then all the world began to ask the reason why. But there was no answer, and finally the matter became one of those permanent puzzles which are referred to only when topics of inquiry are scarce. We may add that the mystery of Rossini's inaction never has been cleared up. It may, however, be found discussed in an intelligent and interesting manner by Mr. Sutherland Edwards, who devotes to the subject one of the closing chapters in his life of the composer. The biographer marshals four popular explanations, which are these: first, disgust at the reception and treatment of "Guillaume Tell"; second, a conviction that nothing better than "Guillaume Tell" could be produced, while a worse was possible; third, annoyance at Meyerbeer's success; fourth, laziness. We hold with Mr. Edwards that the third should be dismissed at once. In one of his sardonic moods, Rossini may have said that he would recommence writing when the Jews had finished their Sabbath, but, apart from his consistent friendship with Meyerbeer, he was not a jealous man, the exalted idea he justifiably entertained of his own powers raising him above the level of so petty a feeling. As for laziness, he remained to the end of his life what he was at the beginning—a man who could do wonders under pressure, but without pressure preferred to enjoy himself. Far from being idle, he was keenly active, though the great vitality in him did not always find vent in what we call work. On the other hand, discontent at the fate of his greatest opera may have made him averse to once more taking up his pen, and the humour of a season finally became the habit of a life. Mr. Edwards contends that the master did not himself know with precision the reasons for his own silence: "It is astonishing how many persons had the coolness, not to say impertinence, to ask Rossini why he never composed anything for the stage after 'Guillaume Tell,' and it is amusing, though also provoking, to find that to most of these inquisitive persons he returned very evasive answers." Whether these premises be sufficient for the biographer's conclusion we shall not stop to inquire, since it will serve a better purpose to quote several recorded sayings of the master that seemed to throw a little light upon the darkness. To Chevalier Neukomm he once said, "You have a passion for industry; I always had a passion for idleness," and, on Neukomm reminding him of his forty operas, added, "That was a long time ago. We ought to come into the world with packthread instead of nerves. But let us drop the subject." Reading between these lines we may, perhaps, see a record of the distress caused by the treatment of "Guillaume Tell," which all evidence goes to show that he keenly felt. On another occasion, when Hiller put the question point-blank, "How can you exist without composing?" Rossini answered "What! would you have me, without motive, without excitement, without a definite intention, write a definite work? I do not require much to be excited into composition, but still I do require something." These words have an important significance. We have seen the master writing all his life under the constraint of circumstances, but after "Guillaume Tell" he was perfectly free. Ambition dictated to him no more; he had won the highest honours a composer could reach. The struggle for material good ceased when competence was assured, and a pleasure-loving nature was naturally insensible to the promptings of a musical instinct theretofore identified with incessant, almost superhuman, toil. It is not wonderful that Rossini found all incitements to composition weak. Again the master, after explaining to Hiller his once-formed intention to write a "Faust," said: "Meanwhile, the Revolution of July had taken place; the Grand Opéra, previously a royal institution, passed into the hands of a private person, my mother was dead, and my father found a residence in Paris unbearable because he did not understand French, so I cancelled the agreement, which bound me by rights to send in four other grand operas, preferring to remain quietly in my native land and enliven the last years of my old father's existence. I had been far away from my poor mother when she expired. This was an endless source of regret to me, and I was most apprehensive that the same might occur in my father's case." Taking note of this filial regard, so honourable to its subject, and also of the statements before made, it is not difficult to discover an explanation of Rossini's conduct—one which satisfies us, though it may hardly be put forward as authoritative.

The year (1836) of Rossini's retirement to Bologna was that also of a visit to Frankfort, where he and Mendelssohn came together through their common friend Hiller. Mendelssohn has, of course, given us a vivid and charming sketch of the Italian master, with whom, however, he was so little in sympathy. We extract the following from a letter to his mother and sister, dated Frankfort, July 14, 1836:—

"Early yesterday, I went to see him (Hiller) and whom should I find sitting there but Rossini, as large as life, in his best and most amiable mood. I really know few men who can be so amusing and witty as he, when he chooses; he kept us laughing incessantly the whole time. I promised that the St. Cecilia Association should sing for him the B minor Mass, and some other things of Sebastian Bach's. It will be quite too charming to see Rossini obliged to admire Sebastian Bach; he thinks, however, 'different countries, different customs,' and is resolved to howl with the wolves. He says he is enchanted with Germany, and when he once gets the list of wines at the Rhine hotel in the evening, the waiter is obliged to show him his room, or he could never manage to find it. He relates the most laughable and amusing things about Paris and all the musicians there, as well as of himself and his compositions, and entertains the most profound respect for all those present, so that you might really believe him if you had no eyes to see his sarcastic face; but intellect and animation and wit sparkle in all his features and in every word, and those who do not consider him a genius ought to hear him expatiating in this way, and they would change their opinion."

Writing of the master at the same time, and with reference to his encounter with Mendelssohn, Ferdinand Hiller says:—

"He had lost the enormous corpulence of former years: his figure was still full, but not disproportioned, and his splendid countenance, which displayed both the power of the thinker and the wit of the humorist, beamed with health and happiness. He spoke French quite as well as Italian, and with the most melodious voice: his long residence in Paris and intercourse with the best people there had transformed him from a haughty young Italian into a man of the world, dignified, graceful and charming, and enchanting everybody by his irresistible amiability. He had come to see us one morning to our great delight, and was describing his journey through Belgium and all that had struck him there, when I heard the bell, and, feeling certain that it was Mendelssohn, ran out to open the door of the corridor. It was Felix, and with him Julius Rietz, who had just arrived. I told them that Rossini was there and Mendelssohn was delighted, but, in spite of all our persuasions, Rietz would not come in and turned back. When Felix appeared, Rossini received him with marked respect, and yet in such a friendly manner that in a few minutes the conversation resumed its flow and became quite animated. He wanted Mendelssohn to play to him, and, after a little resistance on Mendelssohn's side, they arranged to meet at our house again next morning. These meetings were often repeated in the course of the next few days, and it was quite charming to see how Felix, though inwardly resisting, was each time afresh obliged to yield to the overwhelming amiability of the maestro, as he stood at the piano listening with the utmost interest, and expressing his satisfaction more or less openly. I cannot deny the fact—and, indeed, it was perfectly natural—but Felix, with his juvenile looks, playing his compositions to a composer whose melodies just then ruled the whole world of song, was, in a certain measure, ostensibly acting an inferior part—as must always be the case when one artist introduces himself to another without a corresponding return. Mendelssohn soon began to rebel a little. 'If your Rossini,' he said to me one morning when we met at our bath in the Main, 'goes on muttering such things as he asked yesterday I won't play him any more.' 'What did he mutter? I did not hear anything.' 'But I did. When I was playing my F sharp minor Caprice he muttered between his teeth, "Ca sent la Sonate de Scarlatti." 'Well, that's nothing so very dreadful.' 'Ah! Bah!' However, on the following day, he played to him again. I must add that Rossini always looked back to this meeting with Mendelssohn with heartfelt pleasure, and expressed the strongest admiration for his talent. The impression made by Rossini on the whole colony of Frankfort musicians was really overwhelming. The second day after his arrival I had to drive about with him to all the artists of importance, and with many of them to act the part of interpreter. Some were ready to faint with fear and surprise when he appeared. My mother afterwards invited all these gentlemen, and one or two foreign artists who happened to be staying in Frankfort, to meet him at a soirée, and it was almost comic to see how each did his best to shine before the great leader of the light Italian school. Capellmeister Guhr played a Sonata of his own; Ferdinand Ries, the Study with which he had first made a sensation in London; Aloys Schmitt, a Rondo; and some one else, a Notturmo. Mendelssohn was intensely amused at the whole thing. Rossini was more pompous that evening than I ever remember to have seen him; very polite, very amiable, and very complimentary—in fact, too complimentary. But next day his sly humour came out. A grand dinner had been arranged in his honour at the 'Mainlust,' and as many celebrities of all kinds as there was room for took part in it, Mendelssohn among the rest. When the dinner was over, the hero of the day began walking up and down the garden, talking in his usual way; meanwhile the place had become crowded with people who wanted to see the great man, and who pushed and squeezed and peered about to get a peep at him, he all the time pretending to ignore them utterly. I have never witnessed such a personal ovation to a composer in the open air—except, perhaps, on his way to the grave."

* "Mendelssohn: Letters and Recollections," p. 36 et seq.

We do not apologise for presenting the foregoing picture of Rossini at the height of his fame. It may well serve as our last glimpse of him in his capacity as a maker of history. Henceforth, though the view extends over near upon forty years of life, there is little to record.

In July, 1839, the ex-trumpeter and inspector of slaughter-houses at Pesaro died in the arms of his illustrious son. Rossini felt the loss of his father deeply, and the acuteness of his grief brought on an attack of illness which at one time threatened serious consequences. From an ethical standpoint, it may seem a thing of course for a son to cherish his parents, no matter in what circumstances he and they may be placed. But we must take human nature as we find it, and not seldom, when children have risen to wealth and fame, they cease to take pleasure in personally ministering to the humble authors of their existence. Rossini was incapable of such poverty of spirit. He delighted in honouring his parents, as they did in contemplating the greatness of their son, and we already know that one of his reasons for quitting Paris was to be near his aged father for the purpose of making his last days bright and happy.

The "Stabat Mater" next claims attention. In course of time Don Varela, of Madrid, died, and the work, partly written for him by Rossini, and completed by Tadolini, was, in September, 1841, sold to a certain publisher for 2,000 francs. The new owner made no secret of his intention to print it, and the news soon travelled to Rossini, who promptly authorised his own publisher, Troupenas, to intervene for the protection of his reserved rights. The matter, on going before a court, was decided in Rossini's favour, and soon Troupenas became, for 6,000 francs, proprietor of the "Stabat" as we now have it—that is to say, with Tadolini's four movements cut out and others by Rossini substituted. Six movements of the now perfected work were heard in the salons of M. Herz, October 31, 1841, and made so favourable an impression that MM. Escudier frères purchased for 8,000 francs the right of performance during three months. Under their auspices, the "Stabat" was given for the first time at the Théâtre Italien, January 7, 1842, the soloists being Grisi, Albertazzi, Mario and Tamburini. At this point another speculator stepped in—M. Darmoy, director of the Italian—purchasing the rights acquired by the Escudiers for 20,000 francs. Even he did not lose money. Fourteen performances took place under M. Darmoy and brought into the treasury no less a sum than 150,000 francs.

Rossini visited Paris for the benefit of medical advice in May, 1843, but returned to Bologna four months later, and there, in October, 1845, his wife, Madame Colbrand-Rossini, died. Two years later, the master found for her a successor in Mdle. Olympe Pélissier, a lady whom he had known for some time, and who had been assiduous in her attentions both to Rossini and his father during their illness. "She has acted," he said of her, "as a providence to father and son, and I have done my best to make her happy." Soon afterwards the revolutionary spectre, which had troubled Rossini's early years, came on the scene again, and to avoid it the master fled from Bologna to Florence, where a serious illness determined him once more to take up his residence in Paris. He reached the French capital in 1855 and never again left it, finding in its homage, respect, and affection—perhaps, also, in its vivacious life and ample opportunities for enjoyment—cause for entire content. There, though he produced no great work, he did not altogether avoid the pen. To the second Parisian period we owe the "Petite Messe Solennelle," first performed at the house of M. Pillet Will, March 14, 1864. Some smaller pieces have also been published, and many more remain in manuscript. These things, however—the Mass excepted—are but the results of whim or pastime. They have little value or significance as the productions of him who wrote "Guillaume Tell," while some of them are the merest jokes, dedicated to the composer's parrot, or bearing names like "Valse anti-dansante," "Fausse-couche de Polka-mazurka," and "Enchantillon de blague." From the crowd one piece stands forth, it is true, and that is the Hymn written for the Universal Exhibition of 1867, and performed at the distribution of prizes in July. Yet even this shines rather with a light borrowed from the occasion than by any illuminative powers of its own. The composer introduced it under a designation of obvious jocularity. He called it "Hymn with accompaniment for orchestra and military bands, for baritone (solo) in Pontife; chorus of High Priests; chorus of Vivandières, Soldiers, and People. At the end, danse, bells, drums, and cannon. Excusez du peu!!"

The position filled by Rossini in Paris during the best years of the second empire was, in a sense, unique. The master ranked among the "characters" of that illustrious city, and ruled in his world as absolutely as did the Cæsar of the Tuileries over broad France. His charming villa at Passy remained to the end the goal of many pilgrimages, and it was there that, on November 13, 1868, the master reached the end of his career. Rossini's funeral took place on November 21, the rites being celebrated at the Church of the Trinity in a manner becoming a great composer, who was also Foreign Associate of the Institute, Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour, and of the Orders St. Maurice and St. Lazare; commander of many other Orders, and honorary member of a crowd of Academies. A famous company assembled to pay the last honours, while the funeral music was sung by a choir in which such artists as Tamburini, Duprez, Faure, Gardoni, Belval, Delle Sedie, Agnesi, Krauss, Carvalho and Bloch were glad to have place. The soloists included Patti, Nilsson, and Alboni; and so, amid all that was fitting as regards the art he adorned, Rossini went down to the grave.

An estimate of Rossini's influence upon operatic music does not enter into the scheme of this work. Our endeavour has been simply to record the composer's doings and give some idea of the character which shaped his life. Yet even this can hardly have failed in helping the cause of justice to Rossini at a time when many affect to speak of him as superficial and even dishonest. Faults he had in plenty, doubtless, but none the less was he a great and gifted man, who in his day increased the resources of his country's lyric stage, entranced the entire world with melody, and contributed as much as any artistic man to the sum of human enjoyment.

THE NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD OF WALES.

By JOHN G. E. ASTLE.

ALTHOUGH it was scarcely to be expected that the arrangements for the holding of this year's National Eisteddfod in Wales could be commenced without some little quibbling on the part of the promoters, the matter has now been established on a fair basis, and there is every prospect of the forthcoming competitive meetings being very successful in all departments. We may fairly assume that this is due to co-operation. Welshmen were of course the first to inaugurate the preliminary proceedings, and the Eisteddfod is theoretically, if not in fact, an essentially Welsh institution, but their English friends in Cardiff—which is a Welsh port more in a geographical sense than in any other, although it is deemed the metropolis of South Wales—at once came to their aid, and all parties are now bent on a concerted and unified action. A number of sub-committees are constantly meeting to advance the objects which they respectively have in view, and at frequent intervals the general committee assembles to ratify or amend the multifarious recommendations which are brought under their notice. In such a place as Cardiff, where division of opinion acts at times in a very prejudicial manner, this unity is both noticeable and commendable, and it may certainly be regarded as a prognostication of success. It is only fair, too, to allow that a by no means bigoted spirit has been shown in reference to the Eisteddfod by local Welshmen, and it will perhaps be a surprise to many English people, whose notions of the national institution are so often narrow and mistaken, to be informed that the Welsh were thoroughly pleased to invite the countenance and assistance of their English friends in this movement, and that there are many competitions arranged for in which English residents in Wales will be on an equal footing with them. The Eisteddfod, once purely Welsh, still retains its ancient forms, and, while being theoretically the means to some extent of preserving the native language, it is not so essentially Welsh as it was. The fact that it has adapted itself to the bilingual condition of the principality in modern times, is a proof that its promoters are not so narrow-minded as they have not infrequently been said to be, and the success which has attended recent Eisteddfodau ought to be a hint well worthy of the consideration of all English-speaking people. A writer in a recent issue of the Art Journal made a reference to the desirability of Englishmen—whose empire has now become so wide, and whose labours in the cause of music and literature are so vast—deciding upon a means of periodically celebrating their achievements, and he cited the ancient Greek custom of holding Olympic games as a national precedent for this proposed celebration. Might not Englishmen look nearer home for a model of such an institution? For ages the Eisteddfod has been a great civilising and patriotic agency among the aboriginal inhabitants of the land, and it may with reason be submitted that, with certain modifications, it would be most useful and acceptable in an extended form. The fact that it comes from the western side of the country ought to be rather an argument in favour of its acceptance than otherwise, and it may perhaps be assumed that the old English prejudice against it has exploded, and that the petty squabbles of humbler Welshmen have been overlooked in an honest admiration of the grand competitive principles which the ancient institution has commemorated for many centuries past. Four years after the battle of Hastings—viz., in A.D. 1070—an Eisteddfod on a large scale was held under the auspices of Prince Bleddyn ap Kynfyn, and from that remote period until now the historic hills and valleys of the principality have been the oft-recurring scene of literary and musical gatherings. A land upon which the visitation of war has fallen heavily has been faithful to its natural love of peace; and the descendants of the ancient Britons, who fully sustain on all occasions of peril the reputation of their ancestors for bravery, are, and have ever been, a race desirous of propagating a knowledge of the arts and sciences. Of course they have not occupied so prominent a position as the English nation, but that doubtless arises to a great degree from a set of circumstances over which they have no control. To begin with, their language, although poetical, is generally admitted to be one of a limited character. The most exclusive Welshman employs words of "Saxon" origin. Then the whole remnant of the ancient British race is comparatively small, and, finally, they are as a rule poor and uneducated. As it is, the sons of toil must be considered to have done wonders; and when it is borne in mind how much in poor Wales has been accomplished through the Eisteddfodau by a comparative handful of uneducated but exalted Cambrians, it may well be asked "What might not England, on whose possessions the sun never sets, be able to effect in the domains of science and art by means of such a powerful auxiliary?" To this it may be replied that exhibitions of the fine arts and of manufactures meet the case. But a small amount of reflection will show how essentially the two institutions differ. The Eisteddfod affords a more direct encouragement to the poor and unknown; it develops literary tastes, and it is calculated to especially promote what may be termed a social and collective feeling of patriotism. Englishmen individually are invariably patriotic, but there is often a want of cohesion among them as a body. The Eisteddfod could not, of course, be converted into a political agency, neither should it be made the means of bringing men together in clannish fashion. It may, however, be confidently submitted that the establishment of institutions embodying the competitive principles in art and literature would be socially advantageous to English people, and would have the effect of imparting a contemporaneous knowledge of the capacities of our race in the higher mental pursuits. The continuance of exhibitions would not necessarily be affected by the adoption of competitive institutions on the general lines of the Welsh model in various centres.

The Eisteddfod at Cardiff will doubtless be conducted in the ancient Welsh mode, which is described by Mr. John Jenkins in his translation of "The Poetry of Wales." The president or chief, followed by the various grades of the bardic order, will walk in procession (gorymdaith) to the place appointed, where twelve stones are laid in a circle, with one in the centre, to form a gorsedd or throne. When the whole order has assembled, the chief of the bards will ascend the gorsedd, and, from his laurel and flower-bedecked chair, will open the sessions by repeating aloud the mottoes of the order—viz., "Y gwir yn erbyn y byd, yn ngwyned haul a llygad goleuni," or "the truth against the world, in the face of the sun and the eye of light." Verses laudatory of the president will follow, and the competitions in music and art will subsequently take place, the successful competitors being crowned or decorated by the "fair hands of lady patronesses who distribute the prizes." For instances of the talent which the Eisteddfod has been the means of developing Mr. Jenkins refers to Brinley Richards and Edith Wynne.

We may observe that the Welsh institution has not only met with criticism in England, but in America also. The following far-fetched caricature appeared in the New York Herald on December 26, and as a curiosity deserves to be reproduced. The reporter said:—

To those who look upon the Welsh as a race of placidly unimaginative people, inclined to hopelessness, and with small consideration for the more subtle refinements of civilisation, the audience at the Eisteddfod in Chickering Hall last evening would have been a most exhilarating disappointment. A most eminently aristocratic assemblage was there, of people whose life-long struggle with consonants had left no trace of discouragement on their faces. So far as could be judged by the reporter, the Eisteddfod, an institution which antedates the Christian era by more than a century, is a sort of festival intended as a celebration of the gradual elimination of articulate sounds from the language. The slow progress of this operation can easily be judged by the shorthand notes of a conversation overheard by the reporter on the stairs.

"Bdgaxzxkhhj Khorono phgrmkspadr," said an intelligent-looking young woman to an elderly man, and he answered—
"Brkrnkdddwimr."

The presidents selected for the forthcoming Eisteddfod are the Marquis of Bute, Lord Aberdare, the Right Rev. C. J. Vaughan, Dean of Llandaff and Master of the Temple, Sir E. J. Reed, K.C.B., M.P., and the Ven. Archdeacon Griffiths, Llandaff. The Executive Committee is constituted as follows:—Mr. G. A. Stone, Mayor of Cardiff, Chairman; Alderman W. Taylor, M.D., Vice-Chairman and Chairman of the Financial Committee; Mr. A. Thomson, ex-Mayor of Cardiff; Mr. H. J. Evans, Treasurer; the Ven. the Archdeacon of Llandaff, Chairman of the Literary Committee; Mr. S. Aitken, Chairman of the Musical Committee; Mr. Thomas H. Thomas, Chairman of the Arts Committee; Mr. T. H. Riches, Chairman of the Works Committee; Mr. Peter Price, architect; and Mr. D. T. Evans, Secretary. The total amount of the prizes will be about £1,500, a sum largely in excess of that offered last year at Denbigh; the guarantee fund consists of £1,000, and subscriptions amount to £1,100. Musical adjudicators, comprising some of the most eminent English and Welsh composers, have been retained, and among them may be mentioned Dr. G. A. Macfarren, Professor of Music, Cambridge University; Mr. J. Barnby, Eton College; Mr. E. H. Turpin, London; Mr. Joseph Bennett, London; Mr. David Jenkins, Aberystwith; and Mr. B. Emlyn Jones, Hereford. The competitors' programme is arranged in four sections—viz., poetry, prose, music and art. Valuable prizes are offered under each head. In prose the chief money prize is that of £100, for the best History of Welsh literature from the year 1300 to the year 1650, in Welsh or English. Turning our attention to the musical portion of the programme, we find that the great choral competition will consist of three pieces, "Wretched Lovers" ("Acis and Galatea"), "Lord of the golden day" ("Martyr of Antioch") and "Cyfydded Duw." The choirs are to consist of not less than 150 nor more than 200 voices. The first prize is £100, and a gold medal for the conductor, and a second of £30, and a silver medal to the conductor. There will also be two other choral competitions—viz., best singing of Sir G. Elvey's "In that day," recitative, and next three movements (fifty to sixty voices)—first prize, £25, and bâton to conductor; second prize, £10; and choral competition—anthem (choice open to competitors); conductor and performers to be bona fide members of a church

With such a programme as this the musical portion of the Eisteddfod will be one of its most interesting and edifying features, and there is no doubt that among the vast audience that is expected to be present at the meetings (which are to be held in a building capable of accommodating 17,000 persons) there will be visitors from all parts of England. Mr. Lewis Morris, Mr. Marchant Williams and other well-known Welshmen in the metropolis are taking a great interest in the movement. They have visited Cardiff, and it may safely be said that the proceedings this year in connection with the national institution will be watched with exceptional attention on all hands. It has been suggested that the Prince of Wales might be disposed to preside at one of the meetings, but this is not likely to result affirmatively. Patronage, however, cannot be said to be specially needed. The forthcoming national meetings are being looked forward to with zest and pleasure by all classes, and that they promise to be most important and successful cannot be denied.

While the musical competitions are justly prominent, and several first-class concerts are projected also, it would scarcely befit us to conclude without a word or two on the art department. For paintings, casts, designs, models, &c., numerous prizes are offered, and the order of merit will be determined by Mr. Alma Tadema, R.A. (whose works are so well known, and a portrait of whom, by-the-bye, was given in the March number of London Society), and Mr. Fred. Wedmore, art critic. There is, it may be added, a general desire to encourage art productions, and it is a pleasing feature in commercial Cardiff that this is so. Another circumstance is also locally prominent. The proposed University College for South Wales has at length been secured for Cardiff—thanks to the exertions of the members of the Cardiff College Committee, and of the Dean of Llandaff, Mr. Lewis Williams, Councillor Hy. Jones (who first brought the subject before the Corporation), Mr. John Duncan and Mr. J. L. Wheatley (Town Clerk) more especially; and we may perhaps be pardoned for mentioning that an attempt is now being made to promote in Cardiff an art establishment by the sanction of the Cambrian Academy of Art. These are signs of the times, and they indicate a growing tendency towards æsthetic taste, which the Eisteddfod itself will foster in no mean degree. Cardiff is certainly in a fair way to become the “Athens of Wales,” and the fact that in the columns of the Western Mail correspondents have lately taken objection to the designative term of “Welsh” being applied to the University and other “national” institutions is sufficient to show that Cambrians are beginning to more fully realise “what they are and whence they came.”

THE attempt to crowd 7,000 people into an opera-house, in the United States, capable of holding only 3,000 with comfort, which we read of in an American paper, leads us to consider whether it is not possible to organise a system by which each person admitted into a theatre should be provided with a seat. Hitherto it has been the custom to sell a large number of tickets entitling the holders of them to numbered places, and then to take money from as many as can get inside the doors, the prize of a seat falling to those whose physical strength can best endure the struggle to obtain it. Recently the plan has been tried by Mr. D'Oyly Carte, at the Savoy Theatre, of making the crowd waiting for admission form a single file, so that there shall be no crush when the doors are opened. In France, where this method is universally adopted, the system always works well; and there is every reason to suppose that it will eventually be equally successful in this country. But, presuming that there is no desire to admit more persons into the building than it can accommodate, why should not every seat be numbered? In these days of telegraphs and telephones all those who cannot purchase tickets for the evening by personal application at the theatre can very easily do so by aid of these methods of communication; and only those, therefore, who have not provided themselves with secured seats need assemble at the doors at night. Let these, then, be admitted according to the rule laid down by Mr. Carte, and when each seat is occupied the doors may be closed. Of course we know that the sum taken nightly under the present system would be reduced; but if—like the public vehicles—a building were licensed for only as many as can find seats, the management would be held responsible for over-crowding. An arrangement like this would assuredly be hailed with pleasure by all who frequent theatres, if not by the lessees themselves; and had it been adopted at the opera-house in America to which we have alluded, those who were seated and desirous of hearing the music would not have been prevented from doing so by the thousands of complaining victims who were congregated in the lobbies and jostling each other in hopes of obtaining a glimpse of the stage.

As we are not in the habit of frequenting music-halls, we cannot say that we have heard “Paganini Redivivus.” In case, however, we should not have heard of him, he has just issued an advertisement in which he declares his intention not only of condescending to play some works hitherto considered of decided merit, but of giving us a lesson as to their true rendering. He tells us that he “seldom performs Beethoven's Concerto, Mendelssohn's Concerto, Tartini's ‘Devil's Sonata,’ Bach's ‘Chaconne,’ or the other stereotyped pieces of the inevitable so-called classical répertoire,” because he has heard them “so frequently hackneyed about by little Conservatoire pupils on the Continent that they have lost their importance for him.” He is kind enough, however, to say that “although from a violinistic point of view they are worse than trivial, still as musical compositions they are very admirable.” In consequence of “numerous inquiries,” therefore, he will shortly lower his powers to the level of these compositions, and give a “special recital of the above-stated pieces, in order to show the London public how they should be played.” As we have already confessed to being quite unacquainted with the style of this great violinist when interpreting the music which he considers worthy of his talents, we cannot say what new readings he will give us in playing the comparatively trifling Concertos he mentions; but it is to be hoped that he will engage a recognised London concert-room for his recital, and arrange to give it during the London season, so that some of the violin-players who have attempted these works in public may be present to receive a lesson.

SPECIMENS of country musical criticisms sent by correspondents accumulate upon our table so rapidly that we are completely spared the trouble of clipping from the papers ourselves. As the choicest examples of these notices are, as may be expected, the most circumstantial, we regret that we cannot print some of them in their original state; but the exigencies of space compel us to content ourselves with a few extracts. Speaking of a well-known vocalist, in the first notice before us we are told that she “certainly fulfilled the most sanguinary expectations of many who had often heard of her, but not heard her; and her sweet, though powerful, yet at the same time clear, voice fairly captivated the audience.” In a criticism upon a performance of “The Messiah,” another writer—who terms the Oratorio a “comprehensive piece of musical diction”—referring to the tenor's rendering of the first solo, says: “From the first it was evident that he was in good humour with the work before him, for he addressed himself to the task in downright earnest. Having disposed of the opening recitative praiseworthy, he sang the air ‘Every valley shall be exalted’ in a way which plainly lay bare all its beauty”; and of the bass it is recorded that he “was a long way off showing ‘good form’ until he came to ‘The people that walked in darkness.’” But the best specimen perhaps is from an American western journal, where in a notice of a representation of Mozart's “Marriage of Figaro,” it is said that the vocalist who played Figaro “gave the celebrated Cavatina airily, gracefully handling his smooth lower tones in a conscientious manner”; a duet is spoken of as “a tender entrancing melody, swaying gently hither and yon, and carrying hearers into that dreamy state which demands more and more without satiety”; the prima donna's last aria “brought her strongly forward and showed her elasticity”; and after this “the Opera merges into a perfection of blended harmony.” We have every respect for the enthusiasm of this Mozart-lover, but he should not be trusted with pen and ink.

THE growth of music in the service of the Church may be accepted as one more proof of the rapid advance of the art, not as an accomplishment, but as an absolute necessity in the cultivation of the higher faculties of our nature. The feeling of true devotion so apparent in every member of a large congregation when under the influence of a sacred composition by one of the great masters is far beyond that produced by the most eloquent preacher from the pulpit; and even the clergy are now almost unanimous in admitting how powerful an auxiliary is music in enforcing the effect of scriptural text. The few who still dissent from this belief are usually influenced by religious reasons, especially those who object to the use of instruments in a sacred building; and from this point of view, however we might disagree with their opinions, we are at least bound to respect them; but in Dr. Begg, of Glasgow, we have an opponent who takes up a new line of argument. The Rev. Doctor, in a sermon recently preached, says: "The ultimate result of the introduction of instrumental music into public worship would be that the sermon would to some extent be superseded. Some ministers were shameful enough to think that instrumental music would save them the trouble of preparing their sermons. It would save them many things besides that, for organs and musical people were very expensive, and would require to be paid for; and their expenses would be deducted from the salary of the minister." This is indeed a thoroughly practical view of the question; but we can scarcely believe that any conscientious ministers would advocate the introduction of music into a religious service in order to "save them the trouble of preparing their sermons." If, in some cases, it should compel them to shorten them, we do not consider that it would be altogether an unmixed evil.

IN a notice of the performance of Gounod's "Redemption" in Westminster Abbey, a Sydenham paper gives us this information: "Handel devoted his marvellous abilities to the production of an Oratorio called by the same name as that which M. Gounod chose for the work which has lately been brought before the public under the auspices of the Duke of Edinburgh." For the benefit of the writer of this paragraph and the readers of the journal in which it appeared, we must pause in our quotation to say that Handel did not write an Oratorio called "The Redemption," and the Duke of Edinburgh was not present at, and was in no respect connected with, the production of Gounod's work. But the critic—like all persons who know but little of the subject upon which they discourse—is resolved to be particular in his facts, and so he tells us that "the famous master always held his 'Redemption' in esteem. The airs 'Lord, remember David,' and 'He was eyes,' with 'Holy, holy,' were severally reproduced by him in the Operas of 'Sosarme,' 'Siroe,' and 'Rodelinda,' and all of them are still familiar in our mouths as household words." Some twenty or thirty years after Handel's death Dr. Arnold compiled an Oratorio, taking all the music from the great master's Operas and Oratorios, and called this extraordinary production "The Redemption"; but, instead of the songs named above being taken from the Oratorio and placed in the Operas, they were taken from the Operas and placed in the Oratorio. We can imagine that the author of this notice has got a little "mixed" in trying to recollect his readings in musical history; but we fear he must acknowledge that the assertion "the famous master always held his 'Redemption' in esteem" was merely developed from his inner consciousness.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

MR. CARL ROSA commenced his season of English Opera at this establishment, on the 26th ult., and, despite the many Easter Monday attractions, produced one of the two new Operas by English composers announced in his prospectus. "Esmeralda," the work selected for the occasion, has been carefully prepared for musical setting by Theo. Marzials and A. Randegger, from the well-known novel of Victor Hugo; and if in parts somewhat formed upon the conventional models against which so energetic a protest has recently been made, the framework of the story is tolerably well preserved, with the exception of the dénouement, which, in spite of Victor Hugo's climax, ends with the wedding of Phæbus and Esmeralda. Mr. Goring Thomas, the composer of the music, who has studied in Paris, and also at our Royal Academy of Music, has already earned a name by some important vocal pieces, an Overture to an Opera, "The Light of the Harem," and especially by his Choral Ode, "The Sun-Worshippers," produced at the last Norwich Festival; and his undoubted success in his first operatic attempt has now fully justified the confidence reposed in him by those who have faith in the existence of native talent. Before speaking of the music, however, it will be well to record briefly the incidents of the libretto. The scene is laid in Paris in the fifteenth century. The Opera opens in the Beggars' Quarter, where the beggars are holding a feast, and Clopin, their King, is superintending the revels. A cry is heard for help, Gringoire, a pauper poet, is dragged on by a crowd of beggars, who suppose him to be a spy, and he is condemned to death unless he marries one of the maidens before the clock strikes eight. They all turn from him in disdain, when Esmeralda enters and says she will marry him to save his life. Esmeralda has been seen by Claude Frollo, who is greatly struck by her beauty, and is determined, with the aid of Quasimodo, the bellringer of Notre Dame, to carry her off by force. They are, however, prevented by Phæbus de Chateaupers, an officer; Frollo escapes, but Quasimodo is taken, and is about to be punished when Esmeralda pleads for him, and he is set free, vowing he will ever be her guardian. Esmeralda and Phæbus are struck with each other, and Phæbus, after giving her his scarf, leaves her, promising that they shall meet again. In the second act Fleur-de-Lys, who is betrothed to Phæbus, is awaiting the arrival of her lover, and when he appears without his scarf she taxes him with being false. Esmeralda is brought in to sing and dance; she unfolds the scarf given her by Phæbus, who, on being renounced by Fleur-de-Lys, declares he loves Esmeralda, and will defend her from all enemies. In the third act, which is laid in Esmeralda's home, Frollo, who has entered during Esmeralda's absence, hearing the lovers returning, conceals himself, and, in a fit of rage and jealousy, stabs Phæbus. The crowd rushes in, Frollo points to Esmeralda's dagger, which lies on the ground, she is accused of the murder and taken off by the guards to prison. In the last act, as Esmeralda is being led to execution, Gringoire hastily enters, followed by Phæbus, and declares the innocence of Esmeralda; Frollo again tries to stab Phæbus, but is prevented by Quasimodo throwing himself between them and receiving the death-wound. Whatever may be Mr. Thomas's theory of opera, it is difficult indeed to avoid being influenced by the prevailing works of the day; and if, therefore, in listening to his music, we find that a certain timidity in striking out a distinct school of writing for himself has resulted in a mixture of styles, we may reasonably pardon the modesty of so accomplished an artist, and trust that the encouragement liberally accorded to his first operatic venture may stimulate him to increased efforts in the same direction. In the lighter portions of the Opera his individuality seems most strongly marked; for, although he has undoubted dramatic power, there are instances in many of the important choral pieces where his strength seems overtaxed by the varied and long-sustained incidents of the situation. In his recitatives we have certainly reflections of what may be termed the "advanced" school; but in a transition age, to gratify the public taste, we must look backward as well as forward; and it will astonish no one, therefore, to be told that the melodious solos, duets, and simpler concerted pieces were the real "hits" of the Opera. Overtures having gone out of fashion, a brief Introduction for the orchestra opens the work, and the curtain rises upon a well-planned scene representing the revels of the beggars. Here good opportunities occur for bustling and animated concerted music, of which the composer has most successfully availed himself, the Drinking Song for Clopin (the Beggar-King), with chorus, having many effective points, and the scene with Gringoire (the poet), who is saved from execution by Esmeralda, being written both for voices and instruments with much knowledge of effect, if somewhat too heavily scored for the orchestra. An exceedingly melodious and graceful solo for Esmeralda, with chorus, "Oh, fickle, light-hearted swallow," a Scena for Frollo, a Duet for Esmeralda and Phœbus, and the whole of the Finale, in which the Chorus of the Watch is introduced, are amongst the most attractive pieces of this act, which left a highly favourable impression upon the audience. The chorus opening the second act, in the house of Fleur-de-Lys, "Song and flowers now delight us," is appropriate and tuneful, and a pleasing song for Fleur-de-Lys, and a cleverly instrumented but somewhat patchy melody for Phœbus (which gained the encore of the evening) may be also mentioned as amongst the most successful numbers. A brief ballet is followed by an elaborate and well-written Finale, many parts of which are extremely striking—indeed, we may say that, although somewhat constructed upon the "English Opera" form bequeathed to us by Balfe and Bunn, Mr. Thomas has here fully risen to the situation. Unquestionably the best number in the third act is the long and impassioned love duet between Esmeralda and Phœbus, "Nay, if I be like a flower," the varied character in the writing of which, with its charming and thoroughly appropriate instrumentation, should have elicited more enthusiastic marks of approbation than were accorded to it by an audience somewhat inclined throughout the evening to applaud only those beauties in the work which appeared upon the surface. This Duet, however, was preceded by other pieces of much merit, amongst the best of which may be mentioned a long Scena for Frollo, which, however, was somewhat too lugubrious to receive much attention. The last act contains some good dramatic music, Quasimodo's air, "What would I do for my Queen?" (the instrumentation of which is extremely happy), the choral portions cleverly interwoven with the solemn Chant from the cathedral, and the Finale, evidencing no appearance of exhaustion on the part of the composer, who, with Mr. Randegger (the indefatigable Conductor of the Opera), Mr. Carl Rosa, Mr. Harris and the principal vocalists, appeared upon the stage at the conclusion of the work to receive the warm congratulations of the audience. In every respect the Opera was most carefully rendered, much of its success being indeed due to the excellent singing of Madame Georgina Burns in the part of Esmeralda. Miss Clara Perry, too, as Fleur-de-Lys, gave the music intrusted to her with appropriate refinement; and Mr. Barton McGuckin, as Phœbus, Mr. Ludwig as Claude Frollo, Mr. Leslie Crotty as Quasimodo, Mr. B. Davies as Gringoire, and Mr. G. H. Szazelle as Clopin, were thoroughly efficient throughout. Band and chorus seemed well trained to their work; and the scenic arrangements were all that could be desired. The season has commenced with every prospect of success, and we sincerely congratulate Mr. Rosa upon the result of his attempt to establish the fact that we have composers in England worthy of being heard. The production of Mr. Mackenzie's Opera, "Colomba," is now definitely fixed for Thursday evening, the 5th inst.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

REGARDING the last Crystal Palace Concert given in February, too late for mention in our previous notice, it will be sufficient to state briefly that the Symphony was Bennett's in G minor, and that Herr Hausmann, a violoncellist of considerable power, played the Andante and Rondo from Molique's Concerto in D for that instrument. The first performance given in March was of a very different character. Mr. Manns, according to his wont, succeeded in being the first to do honour to the memory of the great master whose recent death has absorbed the attention of the musical world for the last month. The selection at the Wagner Memorial Concert of the 3rd ult. included the Dead March from "Die Götterdämmerung," "Siegfried Idyll," Introduction and Isolde's Death from "Tristan und Isolde," the Valkyries' Ride, and the Introduction to the third act of "Die Meistersinger," in an arrangement not previously heard in England, in which the Sabbath stillness of the Vorspiel is followed by the merry noise of the apprentices and the festive march of the worthy mastersingers of the mediæval German city. The only absolute novelty of the programme was the so-called "Charfreitagszauber," or "Good Friday Spell," from the third act of "Parsifal," a piece full of tender religious feeling, scored for the orchestra alone with rare knowledge of the subtlest effects, which were not always sufficiently emphasised at the Crystal Palace. Apart from this, however, the performance showed great care in preparation, and reflected the highest credit on Mr. Manns and his orchestra. Miss Anna Williams was not very fortunate in her vocal contributions, consisting of Elisabeth's Prayer and the Death Song of Isolde, which latter was entirely beyond her power. One of Wagner's musical lyrics, such as "Träume," from the "Fünf Gedichte," would have been less familiar and more appropriate. At the Concert of the 10th ult. the first appearance of Herr Joachim drew an audience larger than usual, although less numerous than that at the preceding performance. Herr Joachim brought forward one of those "novelties," which are none the less welcome because they have blushed comparatively unseen for more than a century. We are referring to Mozart's Symphony-Concertante for violin and viola in E flat, belonging to the master's youthful period—its probable date is 1780—but none the less admirably worked out on that account. In the performance Herr Joachim was assisted by Herr Krause, the orchestra playing the accompaniments with much delicacy. Spohr's Dramatic Concerto was also given by Herr Joachim, the remainder of the programme including Schumann's Overture, Scherzo and Finale, and Brahms's Orchestral Variations on a Theme by Haydn. By way of contrast the directors had engaged Señor Sarasate for the Concert following upon that which had witnessed the rentrée of the German lord of the sounding bow. He played Mendelssohn's Concerto and a Fantasia on the Spanish airs in Bizet's "Carmen," the applause elicited by both being equally warm and, in its way, equally well-deserved as that accorded to Herr Joachim. Mr. Cowen's Suite for strings, "In the Olden Time," the only novelty of the programme, is in that composer's earlier manner, and would, to an outsider, appear to have preceded the Scandinavian Symphony. Comparison with that largely designed and powerfully executed composition would, of course, be unfair in the case of a work aiming chiefly at graceful imitation of archaic forms of music. Of the five movements the first, Air with Variations, is the most extended, and the third, surnamed, "The Lute," by far the most successful. There is, however, excellent workmanship in every one of these little pieces.

Gounod's "Redemption" was performed for the second time on Wednesday, the 14th ult., and again proved a great success.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE second Concert of the season was given on the 1st ult., the great attraction of the evening being the appearance of the Spanish violinist Señor Sarasate, who had not been heard in this country since 1879; and, although the principal piece chosen on the occasion was Mendelssohn's Concerto, the anxiety to listen to his performance of this popular work was so great that the room was crowded. Herr Joachim's highly refined and intellectual interpretation of a composition demanding not only exceptionally executive powers, but a thoroughly artistic appreciation of the composer's intention should in no respect affect our estimate of its rendering by one who, without any disrespect to his great talents, may be termed a virtuoso; and if in being carried away, therefore, by the emotional style of Señor Sarasate we fully sympathise with the enthusiasm displayed by the audience, it is only because we believe that two distinct readings may be given of a great work. We must take exception, however, to the excessive speed with which he plays the last movement, not because he shows any want of clear articulation in the passages, or that the orchestra finds a difficulty in following him, but because he exhibits his facility of execution at the expense of the composition, and we hear therefore more of Sarasate than of Mendelssohn. Both in the Nocturne of Chopin and a Spanish dance of his own, which he afterwards performed, he was thoroughly at home and received warm and well deserved applause. Bach's Orchestral Suite in D, which commenced the Concert, was well played on the whole; but Raff's fine Symphony "Im Walde," besides being somewhat coarsely executed, was rendered throughout with but little regard for the poetical meaning of so suggestive a composition. The vocalist was Madame Rose Hersee, who gave Mozart's "Dove sono," and Arne's "Where the bee sucks"; and the Overture to "Tannhäuser" concluded a programme which certainly seemed to have been somewhat hastily put together. At the third Concert, on the 15th ult., as a mark of respect to the memory of Wagner, the first part of the programme was devoted to a selection of his works. It was of course easy enough to make a choice of his Overtures "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg," and "Der fliegende Holländer," as specimens of purely orchestral music; but the scene descriptive of Isolde's death, from "Tristan und Isolde," the Ride of the Walkyries, and the Good Friday music from "Parsifal" require stage accessories in order to realise the intention of the composer. All the pieces, however, were warmly applauded—the Ride of the Walkyries being encored—and Senta's ballad from "Der fliegende Holländer," well sung by Madame Valleria, was also enthusiastically received. The second part commenced with a new Violin Concerto by Max Bruch, finely played by Señor Sarasate, and conducted by the composer. This remarkable work is certainly wrongly described as a Concerto "with free use of Scottish melodies," for the freedom displayed relates not to the use but to the abuse of them. In the analytical programme we have the original tunes, and then Max Bruch's distortion of them, so that even in such a familiar air as "Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled," it is only by catching a few notes here and there that we can recognise the features of the victim. Had the composer taken these melodies as we know them, he might have dressed them up in his own fashion, with appropriate display passages for the solo instrument, and the piece might have passed as a Fantasia, but to call it a Concerto because it is cut up into separate movements is simply challenging a criticism totally uncalled for by the nature of the materials used. We must also mention that Señor Sarasate afterwards played two pieces of his own composition—the last a characteristic Spanish Dance, encored—that Madame Valleria sang Elisabeth's Prayer from "Tannhäuser," and that the programme terminated with Mendelssohn's Overture "Ruy Blas." Mr. W. G. Cusins was Conductor of both the Concerts under notice.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

Our record of these entertainments must commence with the Concert of Saturday afternoon, February 24, when the most important item in the programme was Brahms's Sestet for strings in G (Op. 36), the later and more elaborate of his two works in this form. The Sestet in G is chiefly remarkable for the surpassing beauty of the first movement, a stream of pure inspiration from beginning to end. The other movements are scarcely up to the same level of excellence. The work was admirably led by Madame Norman-Néruda, who afterwards rendered Spohr's favourite Adagio in F from the Ninth Concerto. Miss Agnes Zimmermann played Beethoven's Sonata in B flat (Op. 22) in her chastely classical style, and joined Signor Piatti in Rubinstein's effective Sonata in D for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 18). The vocalist, Mlle. Carlotta Badia, introduced a Hebrew Love-Song by Mr. Charles Salaman, which met with a tolerably favourable reception.

Herr Joachim made his reappearance on the following Monday, and St. James's Hall was thronged with the usual eager crowd of amateurs which assembles on such occasions.

The great violinist is never so welcome as when he comes forward with a Beethoven Quartet, preferably one of the Rasoumowski set, and this time he selected the one in E minor (No. 2 of the grand Op. 59 series). His solo was Bach's Chaconne in D minor, in the rendering of which he has no equal. Miss Mazie Krebs played her three favourite Sonatas of Scarlatti, and, mirabile dictu, was not asked for more. Spohr's Pianoforte Trio in E minor (Op. 119), a work full of its composer's choicest melody, concluded an enjoyable Concert. The vocalist was Mr. Edward Lloyd. A Beethoven programme on Saturday, the 3rd ult., attracted a number of expectant listeners far in excess of the capacity of St. James's Hall, hundreds being unable to find standing-room. This is well, for it proves that the mighty Bonn master has not lost his supremacy in the hearts of musical people, notwithstanding any changes of fashion in other directions. The selection was certainly attractive enough, for it included the Kreutzer Sonata for pianoforte and violin, played for the forty-eighth time at these Concerts, and the Quartet in C (Op. 59, No. 3). Miss Krebs performed the Sonata in F sharp (Op. 78), one of the least popular though certainly not the least beautiful of the series, and joined Signor Piatti in the remarkable variations on "See, the conquering hero comes." Mr. Santley's songs were not by Beethoven, perhaps because a little variety was thought needful.

To musicians the Concert of the following Monday was especially interesting, as the programme included Brahms's new String Quintet in F (Op. 88), for the first time in St. James's Hall. The work was introduced to the English public at one of Mr. Henry Holmes's Musical Evenings, on January 24, and it was fully reviewed in the February number of THE MUSICAL TIMES. That being so, we have now only to record the impressions derived from a perfect rendering of the work under the leadership of Herr Joachim. As we anticipated, the first movement, with its cheerful, melodious subjects, and clear, unlaboured part-writing, proved the most satisfactory. Each section of the middle movement is admirable in itself; nothing could be more impressive than the Grave ed appassionato in C sharp minor, and nothing more pleasing than the Allegretto in A, which afterwards reappears as a Presto. But the violent contrasts of style thus presented are a shock to the nerves of the intelligent listener, who does not like to be shifted from one mood to its opposite four times in one movement. Herr Brahms might plead that Beethoven, in his Serenade Trio in D (Op. 8), has afforded a precedent for what he has done, but the excuse would not serve him much. The Finale of the Quintet is strongly suggestive of the corresponding movement in Beethoven's Quartet in C (Op. 59), with which, however, it can only compare at a respectful distance. Its course is brief and vigorous, and it brings the work to an effective conclusion. On the whole, Brahms's latest instrumental composition, despite its inequalities, must be pronounced worthy of his reputation. The other concerted works at this Concert were Mozart's Divertimento for String Trio in E flat and Beethoven's Sonata in G (Op. 30, No. 3), for pianoforte and violin. The pianist, Herr Barth, has splendid mechanism and a powerful tone, but he was heard to more advantage in Schubert's song-like Impromptu in G (Op. 90) than in Schumann's Toccata in C, or Mendelssohn's characteristic piece in E. The songs "Absence" and "There is dew for the flow'ret," by Mr. F. H. Cowen, from a recently published set of six, proved to be superior to the ordinary standard of English ballads. Sung with chaste expression by Miss Santley, they made a highly favourable impression. The programme of Saturday, the 24th, may be dismissed with bare record. It comprised, Mendelssohn's Quintet in A (Op. 18), Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 1, No. 3), Chopin's Polonaise in E flat (Op. 22), played by Herr Barth, and Herr Max Bruch's Hebrew Melody "Kol Nidrei," for violoncello. Madame Max Bruch was announced as the vocalist, but she was indisposed and Miss Carlotta Elliot took her place.

It was surprising to note the words "first time" written against Schumann's Third Pianoforte Trio in G minor (Op. 110), in the programme of Monday, the 24th. But we need not cast our thoughts very far backward to remember the time when Schumann's music was persistently reviled and his name kept as much as possible out of concert programmes. Happily this silly prejudice has given way, and the composer has taken that place among the great masters which is his by right of commanding genius. Though the G minor Trio is among his later works, it is, as a whole, more genial than either of the previous Trios in D minor and F, and should be at least equally popular. The executants on this occasion were warmly recalled after the performance. Beethoven's Quintet in C (Op. 29) is a great favourite, and its situation at the end of the programme kept most of the audience in their places to the close. Messrs. Joachim and Straus played Spohr's Duo-Concertante in G minor (Op. 67, No. 3), and Miss Zimmermann introduced Brahms's Rhapsodie in G minor, a fine composition, and not by any means rhapsodical in form. Miss de Fonblanque sang three more of Mr. Cowen's series of six songs mentioned above.

The last Saturday and Monday Concerts only remain to be briefly chronicled. The concerted works on the 17th were Beethoven's Quartet in A (Op. 18, No. 5) and Schumann's Quintet in E flat (Op. 44), the latter a great favourite with all classes of music lovers. Herr Joachim performed for the twenty-fifth time Tartini's "Trillo del Diavolo," and Miss Krebs gave Beethoven's Polonaise in C (Op. 89), both artists being rapturously encored. Mr. Edward Lloyd contributed "If with all your hearts" and "Ade-laide." The final programme, on the 19th ult., was of the customary length and variety, the only concerted work being the familiar but ever welcome Septet of Beethoven. After this came a number of solos and duets. Miss Krebs gave two of Mendelssohn's Preludes in her best manner, and coalesced with Signor Piatti in three numbers of Schumann's "Stücke im Volkston." Herren Joachim and Straus rendered two movements from Spohr's Duo-Concertante in D (Op. 67), Miss Zimmermann contributed two of Schumann's minor pieces, and Herr Joachim brought the proceedings to a close in the usual manner by playing a selection of Brahms's Hungarian Dances. Mr. Santley was not less successful than on former occasions in Gounod's "Medje," Signor Piatti's "Hymn to God the Father," and Lieder by Schubert and Schumann. Mr. Arthur Chappell announces that the Popular Concerts will be resumed early in November. The earlier the better, but the hope may be expressed that opportunity may be found next year for rendering some slight modicum of notice to English music, the complete neglect of which has constituted the only blot on the twenty-fifth season.

THE BACH CHOIR.

WE scarcely agree with those who hold that this Society went out of its way to produce a modern work like Max Bruch's "Odysseus." The Bach Choir never limited its operations to the music of the great master whose name it bears, and it enjoys a perfect right to produce compositions of every age, our own included, provided always they be worthy of association with the highest aims and pretensions. If an objector urge that "Odysseus" is not thus worthy, we shall feel disposed to go a long way with him; still, it is open for the managers of the choir to entertain a different opinion and to act upon it.

It would serve little purpose to enter here upon a discussion of "Odysseus." The work has been received with such a chorus of disapproval that we are not likely to hear it again, at any rate for some time; and were we to take up the cudgels on its behalf, little effect would be produced while yet the unfavourable impression made by the music is fresh. Sooth to say, however, we have no disposition at all to set out upon so chivalric a course. We admit fully that "Odysseus" is the work of a clever musician, who knows the materials with which he has to deal and how to use them; who is able also at times to produce charming effects, and to command for them the admiration only accorded to excellence. These merits conceded, there remains to point out that in "Odysseus" Herr Bruch undertook a task beyond his means, and selected a theme to which he failed in bringing sufficient fancy, graphic power, variety and melodic charm. Competent to something smaller, he met with more than his match in the Homeric legend. We do not wonder thereat: the musician who nowadays takes up with Greek myths handicaps himself heavily. This is a romantic, not a classic age. We feel but little interest, certainly, in the wanderings of Ulysses, though we may not hate the record as cordially as does the schoolboy, and we are disposed to tolerate them as themes for music only when a master imparts new life and attraction. Herr Bruch does not, in this respect, show himself a master. True, his music consistently ignores classic calmness, dignity and simplicity in favour of the most modern effects. But this only increases a sense of incongruity, and makes failure more conspicuous. The treatment of the various episodes wants the directness and truth which constitute real power. It is very laboured, and, technically, very clever; it bespeaks extreme earnestness and industry—qualities that at all times and everywhere should command respect—yet it soon wearies by reason of the obvious effort there is in it, by the monotony of effect produced when all the means at disposal are kept constantly employed, and by the absence of varied movement. Herr Bruch goes with painful conscientiousness through his task, yet to see him in one part of it is more or less completely to see him in all. We regret the obligation which renders these remarks inevitable, the more because in one scene, "Nausicaa," Herr Bruch shows how well he can write when a subject appeals to him. Here, for once, he is spontaneous, graceful, and melodious. We listen to him with delight, and wish the strain long continuance. Unhappily, this gleam is like an April sunburst—it comes, and from between two clouds.

The work was given under the composer's direction, and performed as well as could have been expected having regard to its serious difficulties. Faults appeared chiefly in the orchestra, where the music had been imperfectly rehearsed; but the choir struggled hard, and for the most part successfully, with their task. The soloists were Miss Carlotta Elliott, Madame Max Bruch, Mr. C. Beckett, Mr. T. Kempton, and Mr. F. King. Of these, though all did well, Madame Bruch commanded most attention. She was suffering from a cold, but indisposition could not conceal the fact that she possesses a fine contralto voice, with almost the upward range of a mezzo-soprano, and that she uses it like a true artist. Her delivery of Penelope's music was really fine. It struck home to the audience, and secured for the singer a repute which will make her welcome when next she comes. Herr Bruch conducted skilfully.

LONDON MUSICAL SOCIETY.

No musical institution in this country has more decisively fulfilled the avowed object with which it started than the London Musical Society. The original announcement that it was formed for the purpose of performing works chiefly new to England, the compositions of either British or foreign masters, dead or living, of recognised ability, has been so strictly adhered to that, even in the short time it has been in existence, we are indebted to this amateur body of choralsists, and their energetic Conductor, Mr. Barnby, for the first hearing of works which have since obtained due recognition, amongst which may be mentioned Goetz's "Nenia" and 137th Psalm, "By the Waters of Babylon"; Hofmann's "Cinderella"; Schubert's Overture, "Des Teufels Lustschoss," and a Violin Concerto by F. David. The success of the Society has been so decisive that its promoters have now resolved to open the concerts to the general public, engaging a professional orchestra and professional solo vocalists, and at the first of these performances on the 10th ult. one of the most remarkable compositions of modern times, Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," was submitted for the first time to a crowded and highly appreciative audience. This beautiful work has been so thoroughly analysed in the reviewing columns of our last number that we need only supplement this notice by recording our impression upon hearing it performed by a well-trained choir, solo voices and orchestra; and here we may at once say that whilst lingering over the several exquisite gems at our leisure, with only a pianoforte copy before us, we could scarcely have imagined how much their charm would be enhanced by the instrumental surroundings with which they must henceforth be indelibly associated by all who were fortunate enough to hear them. For freshness of melody, artistic development and deep sympathy with the words we can scarcely call to mind any recent sacred work which can take higher rank; and there can be little doubt that its constant repetition will but strengthen the effect of its first performance. The poignant sorrow of the opening movement, "Stabat Mater dolorosa," so faithfully reflected by the heartfelt notes to which it is set, at once rivetted the attention of the audience; and the quartet "Quis est homo," the fine chorus in C minor "Eia Mater," the solo and chorus, "Fac ut ardeat," the lovely choral piece, "Tui nati vulnerati,"—one of the most melodious numbers in the work—the two choruses, "Fac me vobis tecum ferre," and "Virgo, virginum præclara,"—the first with tenor solo—the duet "Fac ut portem," for soprano and tenor, the alto solo, "Inflammatum," and the final quartet and chorus, "Quando corpus," were followed throughout with an intensity which reminded us as much of the religious devotion of a congregation as the artistic admiration of an audience. The exquisite and varied colouring of the orchestration—although somewhat tinged with the characteristics of the modern German school—is in no place forced for a special temporary "effect," every phase of feeling being expressed with equal truthfulness by voices and instruments; and at the conclusion of the work the enthusiasm of the hearers was so unmistakably shown as to prove beyond doubt that Dvorák must henceforth occupy as high a place in this country in sacred as in secular composition, if, indeed, his "Stabat Mater" does not take a firmer hold of the general public than any work we have hitherto heard from his pen. The principal vocalists—Madame Howitz, Madame Isabel Fasset, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Frederic King—gave a fairly efficient rendering of the solo music, although the occasional faulty intonation of the ladies somewhat marred the effect. The choir was exceptionally good throughout, and the refined orchestral accompaniments were appropriately subdued, mainly no doubt owing to the watchful care of the Conductor, who had evidently resolved that the rendering of this work should be a triumph for all concerned. The performance of Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor by Herr Max Laistner was scarcely one to enhance the merit of a composition which requires something more than executive power to render effective, especially after the presentation of a work offering so violent a contrast in style; but the applause at its conclusion showed that a large portion of the audience, at least, did not share our feeling. Schumann's "Manfred" music, highly dramatic as it is throughout, was scarcely a good work to choose as a finale to this interesting Concert unless time could have allowed us to hear the recitations which the composer included in his plan when musically illustrating the poem. Although, however, of opinion that Schumann's design should be respected, we cannot but be grateful for the opportunity thus afforded of listening to descriptive music of so high a character. The execution of this difficult work was excellent throughout; and Mr. Barnby, with the whole of the forces under his direction, have indeed a right to feel proud at the success of their first appeal to a public audience.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

A VERY large audience assembled on the 14th ult., when the "Faust" of Berlioz was performed, for the second time, by this Society. The work has taken a firm hold on the public, and is not likely to sink again into the neglect which it endured for nearly a generation. So much has already been said concerning its salient features that we need only refer to the performance, which was, on the whole, one of exceptional excellence. It is doubtful whether the choruses have ever been heard to better advantage than they were on this occasion, as interpreted by Mr. Barnby's splendid choir. Madame Valleria was very successful in the soprano airs, the music suiting her style to a nicety. The "King of Thule" air was redemanded, but the request was wisely declined, and the actual repeats were only in the instances of the Rakoczy March, the Ballet des Sylphes, and Mephistopheles' Mocking Serenade. The other soloists were Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Santley and Mr. H. Pyatt, who have often appeared in the same parts, and who could not be replaced with advantage. The performance is to be repeated on the 17th inst.

On Good Friday "The Messiah" was given before a large audience, the soloists being Miss Anna Williams, Madame Enriquez, Mr. W. H. Cummings (who replaced Mr. Joseph Maas), and Mr. Robert Hilton. Mr. Barnby conducted as usual on both the above occasions.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

AN orchestral Concert by the students of this institution was given at St. James's Hall, on the evening of the 16th ult., before a large audience. An Andante and Allegro con brio from a MS. Symphony in D minor, by Mr. G. J. Bennett, was a highly interesting item in the programme, the writing throughout evidencing not only a knowledge of those technical laws of composition which may be acquired by average intelligence and earnest industry, but a creative faculty and individuality of thought which cannot fail in due course of time to ripen. The composer—who has before shown honourable proofs of his undoubted talents—was unanimously called before the audience at the conclusion of his work and warmly applauded. Praise must also be accorded to Mr. Herbert Smith (another student), who contributed a graceful Serenade, well sung by Mr. Dyved Lewis, with harp obligato by Miss Florence Chaplin. In Brahms's difficult Pianoforte Concerto in D minor Miss Cantelo fully sustained that reputation which has already been acknowledged even outside the institution in which she was trained; and Mr. Septimus Webbe gave so excellent a rendering of Schumann's Concerto in A minor as to elicit a perfect storm of applause; indeed, there can be little doubt that the career of this young pupil—for he seems scarcely more than fifteen years of age—will be anxiously watched by the many who doubtless became acquainted with his exceptional powers for the first time on this occasion. Mendelssohn's "First Walpurgis Night"—the solos well sung by Miss Marion Burton, Mr. Hirwen Jones and Mr. Lucas Williams—most successfully tested the quality of the choir; and space compels us to award only a passing word of commendation to Miss Margaret Devey for her performance of the Allegro moderato from Sir Julius Benedict's pianoforte Concerto in E flat; to Mr. Prentice Chapman, for his rendering of Ferdinand David's Andante and Scherzo capriccioso (Op. 16) on the violin; and to Miss Eleanor Rees, for her singing of Mozart's "Voi che sapete." The Concert, which concluded with the Overture to "Le Nozze di Figaro," was conducted, with his usual intelligence, by Mr. William Shakespeare.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

THE 145th Anniversary Festival of this Society took place on the 13th ult., at St. James's Hall, under the presidency of Mr. Arthur Sullivan. In proposing the toast "Prosperity to the Royal Society of Musicians," the Chairman dwelt particularly upon the great advantage of joining this benevolent Institution at an early age, and, in proof of the lasting benefit conferred upon those members who became claimants upon the fund, mentioned the case of a widow lately deceased who had been supported by the Society since the end of last century. The toast "Literature and Art" was proposed by Mr. J. Hollingshead and responded to by Mr. G. A. Sala. "Music and the Drama," proposed by Mr. Charles Dickens, elicited a pungent speech from Mr. W. S. Gilbert, who gave an amusing description of the manner in which French pieces were "adapted" for English audiences, and expressed an opinion that as long as this system was pursued the drama in this country must continue to decline. In an earnest and eloquent speech, Professor Macfarren proposed "The health of the Chairman," for which Mr. Sullivan briefly and feelingly responded. The solo vocalists were Madame Patey and Mr. E. Lloyd; the London Vocal Union, under the able direction of Mr. Fred. Walker, also lent valuable assistance; and the instrumentalists were Madame Frickenhaus (pianoforte) and Mr. Carodus (violin)—Mr. Fountain Meen accompanying with his usual skill and judgment at the pianoforte. The subscriptions amounted to £800, including £100 each from the Chairman and Mr. Molineux and £50 from Messrs. Broadwood.

BOROUGH OF HACKNEY CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

THE third Concert of the season took place at the Shoreditch Town Hall, on the 12th ult., when Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri" was performed, the solo vocalists being Miss Marianne Fenna, Miss Jessie Jones, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. John Bridson. Under the able direction of Mr. Ebenezer Prout the salient points of this beautiful Cantata were admirably revealed, not only the accuracy but the truthfulness of expression in all the choral portions of the work evidencing the result of much earnest and painstaking training. The solos were also most efficiently rendered, and the composition was received with an enthusiasm which must have amply repaid the Conductor and his loyal choral body for their untiring efforts in the cause of good music. The Cantata was preceded by Cherubini's Overture to "Medea." At the next Concert a selection from the works of living English composers is announced.

BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE.

AN Organ Recital, interspersed with vocal music, was given at this Institute on Saturday evening, the 24th ult., by Mr. W. de Manley Sergison, Organist of St. Peter's, Eaton Square, the choir of St. Peter's Church assisting. Being Easter Eve, the vocal selections consisted wholly of anthems and motets; indeed, the entire programme was appropriately restricted to works suited for church use—we purposely avoid the unmeaning term "sacred music." Mr. Sergison opened his Recital with Rheinberger's "Sonata Pastorale," a fair specimen of the modern German school of organ composition, written in three movements, linked together so as to form one continuous whole. The Sonata is founded on the 8th Gregorian tone, of which considerable use is made in the first and last movements; the middle movement, a graceful intermezzo, is likely to be the most popular; while the finale, which consists of a fugue on a well-marked subject, will probably prove the most attractive to the musician. The whole Sonata was well rendered and loudly applauded. The other items of the programme were all more or less familiar: they were Gilmant's "Elevation" in A flat, Handel's Concerto No. 2, in B flat, Chipp's Andante in G (No. 3 of the twenty-four), Batiste's Overture on the old French Easter melody "O filii et filiae;" and Lemmens's Marche Triomphale, for the organ; and, for the choir, Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," Mozart's "Ave Verum," Gounod's "O Salutaris hostia" (encored), a Quartet from Benedict's "St. Peter," and Wesley's "Blessed be the God and Father." The singing of the choir was excellent throughout, and reflected the greatest credit on Mr. Sergison in his capacity of choirmaster.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

THE most sacred and historic building on English ground was the scene of a highly impressive and interesting "function" on the 13th ult., when Gounod's "Redemption" formed part of a religious service in aid of the Westminster Hospital. Many a ceremony has taken place in the fane of Edward the Confessor during the magnificent procession of the centuries throughout which it has existed, but that now referred to had features of its own not insufficient to confer distinction even amongst so illustrious a crowd. It meant something more than the consecration of religion and God-given talent to the sacred cause of charity. It involved a distinct recognition, for their own sake, of great works of art sacred in character and purpose. As to this, the church is only beginning to wake up to her duty, but, though the perception has come late, much has already been done. Our cathedrals are frequently made more useful, and in a sense more beautiful, by great performances of religious music, which not only impress the mind and elevate the feeling, but have a reflex action upon the art they exemplify. We have often contended that the church may, with perfect propriety, become again the "nursing mother" of music in its most exalted form. We now clearly see her in the act of discharging the duty. The Westminster Abbey performance meant this if it had any meaning at all.

Dr. Bridge, Organist of the Abbey, had, as a matter of course, direction of the enterprise, and under his guidance ample arrangements were made for efficiency, comprising the engagement of an adequate orchestra and a numerous chorus, including a strong force of youthful choristers, whose singing of the unfamiliar music was a frequent cause of admiring comment. How many sectional rehearsals took place we are not able to say, but on the night preceding the Service, there was a general rehearsal, of which some 2,000 persons were eager hearers. Their presence, however, did not affect Dr. Bridge's conduct of the task in hand. Having his forces ranged in the space which divides the two transepts, and commanding them from the steps leading to the Sacramin, he gave all concerned a thorough drilling with results perfectly satisfactory. The news of this must have been spread abroad by the many witnesses, for next evening the Abbey was besieged by an enormous crowd, who soon filled every available seat and were glad to find even standing room in the remoteness of the nave. A more striking spectacle the old church has rarely presented than when the army of white-robed singers took their places in the centre of this vast congregation, and, after preliminary devotions, the strains of Gounod's work began to fill the edifice with an atmosphere charged with their own solemnity. We need not follow the performance step by step. Enough that it proved generally adequate; the soprano and contralto solos being well sung by two chorists, while the principal tenor and bass music was safe in the hands of Mr. Harper Kearton and Mr. Hilton respectively. The choruses were one and all impressively rendered—some of them with a grandeur never before realised, so much were results favoured by the nature of the building. The celestial choir in the great chorus "Unfold, ye portals everlasting" was, by a happy idea, placed high up in the triforium (as were the trumpets in the opening number of the second part), and it may be imagined what a thrilling impression followed when down, seemingly from the heights of heaven, came the angelic question, "But who is He, the King of Glory?" No one present will ever forget it; but, indeed, the entire effect of "The Redemption" in Westminster Abbey went to prove the work pre-eminently fitted for religious service. Religious it is to the very core, and it may be made, in our places of worship a great aid to the exalted purpose for which those places exist. We felicitate Dr. Bridge, who conducted admirably, upon the success that crowned his labours.

In the course of the service, the Dean gave a short exhortation, and a collection was made amounting, with donations, to over £600, of which upwards of £400 went to the funds of the adjacent hospital.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

BACH'S "St. Matthew" Passion Music was again performed in the Cathedral of London on the evening of Tuesday in Holy Week, the 20th ult., on the present occasion following closely the performance at Westminster Abbey, which we chronicle above, of M. Gounod's "Redemption." However great the interest which has undoubtedly been awakened by the most recent addition to oratorio, a proof that certainly not one jot has abated in that attaching to the grand work which has already stood the test of a century and a half, and which covers in a more ample degree a portion of the ground trodden by the French composer, was most indisputably afforded by the enormous throng of persons that literally crowded the building fully an hour before the commencement of the service.

The service commenced with Dr. Stainer's arrangement of the Miserere, the alternate verses being sung by the Rev. C. N. Kelly, this time without the organ we are happy to say, the choir responding, also without accompaniment, most excellently. The performance of the Oratorio itself was, however, scarcely equal to that of some previous occasions, the difference of pitch between orchestra, piano, and organ becoming at times rather painfully noticeable and apparently influencing in a greater or less degree the intonation of all the soloists. The chorus, however, was excellent throughout. Dr. Stainer conducted,

Mr. Frederick Walker presided at the piano and Mr. G. C. Martin at the organ during the service. The Evangelist's part was taken by Mr. Kenningham, that of the Saviour by Mr. Kempton, the other solos by Messrs. Hanson, De Lacy and Horscroft; the soprano portions being taken by the boys of the Cathedral Choir. Among the distinguished visitors present may be named the Princess of Wales and the Lord Chief Justice of England.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Amateur Harmonic Society gave the last Concert of the series on the 1st ult., when Sullivan's "Prodigal Son" and Gaul's "Holy City" formed the programme, with Miss Anna Williams, Miss Helen D'Alton, Mr. D'Arcy Ferris and Mr. Frederic King as principal vocalists. Mr. Maas had been originally announced for the principal tenor work, but, owing to indisposition, he was replaced at the eleventh hour by Mr. Ferris, who acquitted himself, under all the circumstances, very creditably. The "Prodigal Son," composed for the Worcester Festival of 1868, is a somewhat immature example of the composer's talent, but what it lacks in breadth, elaboration and solemnity is atoned for to some extent by its never-failing naïveté, freshness and earnestness—qualities which are occasionally wanting in Mr. Sullivan's later and more ambitious Oratorios. The performance, under Mr. Stockley's competent direction, was a fairly satisfactory one, though the choir was occasionally a little uncertain in intonation and hesitating in attack, besides being frequently overweighed by the band. Miss Williams sang with irreproachable expression and power the fine soprano air, "O that thou hadst hearkened"; Miss D'Alton exhibited becoming tenderness and suavity in the dulcet admonitory air, "Love not the world"; Mr. D'Arcy Ferris, though somewhat overpowered by the accompanying band and chorus in the "Revel" scene, sang the tenor music generally with refinement and effect; and Mr. F. King was especially happy in the fine recitative and air for bass "Bring forth the best robe," in which the joyous feelings of the father on the prodigal's return are so admirably expressed. The choir was more at home in Mr. Gaul's tuneful and graceful Cantata, which has undergone some revision since its successful production at the late Birmingham Festival. The unaccompanied semi-chorus which has been interpolated in the second part between the contralto air and the soprano solo "These are they which came" is not only a genuine structural improvement, but a welcome addition to the musical features of the work. Miss Williams was very effective in the soprano air, Miss Helen D'Alton made much of the melodious contralto solo "Eye hath not seen," which contains the leading motive of the Cantata, and Mr. C. Bragg sang the short tenor air "My soul is athirst" with pleasing voice and expression.

The Orchestral Concert given by the musical section of the Midland Institute, on the afternoon of the 3rd, was of more than average interest, comprising, Schumann's first Symphony in B flat (Op. 38), composed in 1841, Mozart's early Overture to "Die Entführung aus dem Serail," the Adagio and Finale from Ferdinand David's Violin Concerto in D minor, Sterndale Bennett's Caprice in E, for piano, and orchestra (Op. 22), Delibes's "Sylvia" ballet suite, and a "Mélodie" and "A l'Espagnole," by Cowen. The effect of the Violin Concerto, in which the solo instrument devolved upon Mr. T. M. Abbott, was unfortunately marred by the substitution of a pianoforte accompaniment for the band, owing to the non-arrival of the band parts. Full justice, however, was done to the Schumann Symphony and most of the other orchestral items, in which an occasional want of delicacy was the only fault discoverable, and Mr. Winn gave a masterly rendering of Bennett's delightful Caprice, which dates from about the same period as the Schumann Symphony, having been composed during Bennett's visit to Leipzig in 1840-1.

The most important musical event of the month was Messrs. Harrison's final Concert on the 6th, when Mr. Charles Hallé's band co-operated with Miss Orridge, Mr. Santley, Madame Norman-Néruda and Mr. Hallé himself in giving effect to a more than usually interesting programme. The band selections comprised Weber's

"Oberon" Overture, Haydn's Eleventh Symphony in D, the Introduction to "Lohengrin," Taubert's Liebeslied from "The Tempest," and Gounod's ballet music from "Polyeucte." The so-called "Clock" Symphony of Papa Haydn was of course child's play to Mr. Hallé's practised orchestra, and all four movements were given with the most perfect finish and refinement. The "Bellona" March, or Pagan ballet music, from Gounod's lyric apotheosis of the Christian martyr, "a work of apostolic art," as he styles it himself, was given here for the first time on this occasion; but, as the last piece of a somewhat lengthy programme, it was not heard to much advantage. The noble Overture of Weber, the mystic Prelude of Wagner, and the piquant unpretentious Liebeslied by the Berlin composer Taubert, were all charmingly rendered, the Liebeslied being repeated in conformity with an enthusiastic demand. Madame Norman-Néruda played with rare power, delicacy and finish Spohr's masterly Ninth Concerto in D minor, composed in 1820, and in the exacting air Varié in D of Vieuxtemps, an admirable display piece for a virtuoso, excited such an outburst of enthusiasm as could only be allayed by a second return to the orchestra. In two of the four posthumous Impromptus of Schubert, Mr. Hallé's perfect technique and refined feeling found ample scope. Of the vocal items it will suffice to mention Dr. Pepusch's so-called Cantata "Alexis," sung by Miss Orridge with much sweetness and expression, a new song, on somewhat hackneyed lines, by Cowen, in which the same lady won an encore, and Handel's "Ezio," and Gounod's couplets, "Au bruit des lours Marteaux" from "Philonon et Baucis," admirably sung by Mr. Santley, who was compelled to repeat the second verse of the pastoral.

On the 15th, the fourth and final Concert of the Festival Choral Society was signalled by the first production in Birmingham of Cherubini's great Mass in D minor, with which was bracketed Gade's charming Cantata "Psyche," one of the successes of the late Birmingham Festival. The executive resources were on the usual complete scale at these Concerts, comprising a band and chorus of some 350 performers, with Miss Anna Williams, Mrs. Titterton, Miss Orridge, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. Frederic King and Mr. Henry Blower as vocal principals. The Mass, if one of the finest, is also one of the longest works of its class, and considering the elevation of its style and the contrapuntal severity and elaboration of its treatment, which make heavy demands upon its audience, it would have furnished ample material for one Concert without the addition of the Danish composer's work. The performance on the whole was creditable, if not quite irreproachable. That of Gade's Cantata, in which the chief honours were borne off by Miss Anna Williams, was admirable throughout.

At Mr. Stratton's last Chamber Concert, on the 19th, the principal features were an unpublished Trio in D minor, for piano, violin and violoncello by the late J. H. Griesbach, an interesting but somewhat conventional work; Raff's Romance in F major, for horn and pianoforte; Schubert's lengthy Pianoforte Duet "Divertissement à l'Hongroise," the subject of which he derived from a kitchenmaid of the Esterházy family; a Quartet for pianoforte, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, by the Cavaliere L. F. Casamorata, a tuneful composition in the old Bocherini style; a Lied for clarinet, "Verlorenes Glück," by Carl Bärmann; and a couple of excerpts from Spohr's "Six pièces de Salon," for violin (Op. 145). The performers, all local players, acquitted themselves with skill and feeling.

The Good Friday celebrations comprised two performances of "The Messiah"—one by the Philharmonic Union, under Dr. Swinnerton Heap, and the other by the Holte Choral Society, under Mr. C. J. Stevens. Neither of them calls for special notice. On the evening of the same day a new setting of "The Passion" by Mr. Gaul, the text compiled and versified by the Rev. J. C. Blizzard, was given for the first time, in presence of a large congregation, in St. Augustine's Church. The Cantata is in six scenes, each preceded by a choral antiphon and ending with a hymn, in which the congregation was invited to join. The music throughout is tuneful and scholarly, but, as it is the composer's intention to revise and score the work shortly for orchestra, it may be well to reserve criticism for the present.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MADAME SOPHIE MENTER'S Recital at the Victoria Rooms, on the 5th ult., was largely attended, and her audience appeared delighted with her selection of music, which varied from the sober dignity of the Beethoven Sonata (Op. 81) to the electrifying brilliancy of Mendelssohn's Wedding March—(sic)—arranged by Liszt. Of Madame Menter's marvellous technical skill there can be only one opinion, but her reading of Beethoven's music provokes a question as to how far the performer is justified in adding to, altering or omitting the composer's marks of expression; and we confess to being old-fashioned enough ourselves to prefer the Wedding March as Mendelssohn wrote it.

On the 14th ult. a Concert was given in Big School, Clifton College, in aid of the Chapel Organ Fund, and although there were no second or unreserved seats the room was well filled. Herr Joachim, Miss Agnes Zimmermann and Miss Santley were the performers, Miss Maud White accompanying the latter in two of her own songs, "Ye Cupids, droop each little head" and "Semper Fideles." Miss Santley's pure voice and artistic singing were displayed to more advantage in this comparatively small room than on the occasion of her last visit to Clifton, when she sang at the Victoria Rooms. The performance of Herr Joachim and Miss Zimmermann was, of course, above criticism.

Of local Concerts proper the most important during the past month was a performance of "Elijah" by the People's Concert Society at the Colston Hall, on the 19th ult. It must have required some courage, not to say audacity, on the part of so young a Society to attack such a work; but, taking its object into consideration, the Conductor was perhaps justified in attempting it. There is an enormous section of the population of every large city to whom the expensive Festival Concerts, and even Shilling Popular Concerts, are a mere name, the cost of such music being quite beyond their limited means, and it is for the benefit of this class that the Bristol People's Concert Society, founded a couple of years ago, gives occasional Concerts of more or less classical music, providing 2,000 seats at threepence each. There is another such Society at present extant in Bristol, known as the Musical Association, and it is a matter of regret that the two should not be amalgamated, as there might then be some chance of their having one tolerably efficient band and chorus instead of two very indifferent ones; but so far there appears to be little prospect of this. The performance of both band and choir on the 19th ult. was rough in the extreme, the chorus not infrequently reading sharps for flats and crotchets for quavers, and the trombones, for instance, being out of tune throughout; but the intonation of the choir in the first part of the Oratorio was fairly good, and there was tone enough to give promise of better possibilities in the future. We cannot say as much for the band. Mr. Watts, the leader, played well, and did his utmost to keep the strings together, but there were often differences of opinion among them which defied the praiseworthy efforts of both leader and Conductor. This, however, was of the less consequence owing to the presence of Mr. Riseley, who was at the organ, and contrived, by his masterly accompaniments, to cover and conceal much of the weakness in the orchestra. But, looking at the raison d'être of the performance, we prefer praising the intention of the performers to pointing out their failures in result. It was a bold experiment to offer an Oratorio to an audience composed almost exclusively of working men and women, and, as far as their pleasure was concerned, it was completely successful. The Conductor, Mr. Whitaker, made a great mistake in permitting applause at the end of each number. Applause at any sacred concert is unseemly; applause in Oratorio is inartistic as well as irreverent, for nothing can be more destructive to the continuity of both music and story than to break in with hand-clapping and stamping of feet between a solo and a chorus which have not even a symphony to divide them. The principal vocalists were Miss Julia Jones, Madame Florence Winn, Mr. E. T. Morgan, and Mr. Montague Warlock, the last singing the music of Elijah with great feeling and considerable dramatic power, and proving himself equal, both in voice and execution, to the part he had undertaken.

On Palm Sunday Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was given at the Pro-Cathedral, on which occasion also Mr. Warlock sang the bass music, and acquitted himself extremely well. The effect of the "Quando corpus" was spoilt by the organ accompaniment, which was the worst part of the performance.

Mr. Riseley gave Organ Recitals at the Colston Hall, on the 1st, 3rd, 17th, and 24th ult., also an afternoon and evening Recital of Sacred Music on Good Friday, when there were very large and attentive audiences, composed almost exclusively of the working classes.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Organ Recitals given by M. Guilment in the Huddersfield Town Hall on February 23 and 24 were attended by crowded audiences. At the first of these Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor and Handel's Tenth Concerto in D were magnificently played, and a masterly example of improvisation upon a set theme was also given. On the second occasion the programme was of a more popular nature.

The first Yorkshire performance of Gounod's "Redemption" was given on February 26 by the Hull Vocal Society, under the superintendence of Mr. G. F. Jackman, and with the following principals: Miss Annie Marriott, Miss Helen D'Alton, Mrs. Whitehead, Mr. Frank Boyle, and Mr. Frederic King. The Concert was highly successful, and the audience very large and appreciative.

The second Concert of the Leeds Amateur Orchestral Society, on the 2nd ult., was chiefly remarkable for the appearance of Mr. Carodus as solo violinist, who is nowhere more popular than in his native county. His selections were listened to with marked attention, and warmly applauded. Mr. J. P. Bowling was Conductor and solo pianist, and Madame Tonnelier and Mr. S. Webb contributed songs.

The second performance of Gounod's "Redemption" in Yorkshire gave unbounded satisfaction. It was sung at the sixth Bradford Subscription Concert on the 9th ult., by the Bradford Festival Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Charles Hallé, and with the assistance of his Manchester orchestra. The principals were Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Orridge, Miss Tomlinson, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Thornton Wood. Mrs. Hutchinson had a somewhat too arduous task to perform, but sang with the greatest feeling; Miss Orridge created a deep impression in the touching lament of Mary, "While my watch I am keeping"; Mr. Edward Lloyd was heard at his best, and displayed consummate taste in all his efforts; and Mr. Santley, though burdened with a double rôle—that of our Lord and one of the Narrators—and also suffering from hoarseness, declaimed the recitatives with splendid effect. The chorus-singing was really excellent; the necessary gradations of tone, the fitting expression in such numbers as "The Reproaches," and the attack and power requisite for an adequate rendering of "Unfold, ye portals everlasting" and the final chorus, "The Word is flesh become," being carefully observed. We have never heard the Bradford Festival Choral Society sing better. The orchestra fulfilled the highest expectations, and Mr. Charles Hallé's conducting was most artistic throughout. The general verdict of the press and of amateurs was unanimous in admiration of the composer's aims; but the character of the recitatives, the predominance of the orchestra, and the absence of the usual detached airs and choruses of the familiar type, were pointed out as features which would hinder "The Redemption" from ranking—at least, for the present—above older favourites among the oratorios of Handel and Mendelssohn.

The series of Leeds Chamber Concerts for the present season was concluded on the 13th ult., when Herren Peiniger and Speelman (violin), Mr. W. H. Hill (viola) and Signor Piatti (cello) appeared in the Albert Hall, with Mr. Charles Wilkinson as pianist and Miss Thudichum as vocalist. The lady was unfortunately suffering from a cold so severe that one of her songs was omitted, and the others were given under manifestly great difficulties.

Beethoven's String Quartet in C minor (Op. 18, No. 4) and Mozart's in D major respectively commenced and ended the Concert; the delightful Scherzo in the former was finely played. Herr Peiniger's rendering of two of Brahms's Hungarian dances (arranged by Joachim) was much enjoyed, and a still greater treat was given in Schubert's Piano Trio in E flat (Op. 99), played by Herr Peiniger, Signor Piatti and Mr. Wilkinson. The second movement (Andante un poco mosso) was rapturously applauded. Finally Signor Piatti created the utmost enthusiasm by his perfect interpretation of Schubert's "Ave Maria" and his own Tarantelle, in both of which his wonderful phrasing and accuracy of tone were as remarkable as ever.

Mr. Midgley's second Classical Chamber Concert followed on the 14th ult., at the Bradford Church Institute. The programme was composed of the five following selections: Stanford's Quartet in F (Op. 15), Spohr's "Potpourri Irlandais" (violin solo), Chopin's Polonaises in C sharp minor and A (Op. 26, No. 1, and Op. 40, No. 1), Mozart's Divertimento in E flat for strings, and Mendelssohn's Quartet in B minor (Op. 3). The executants were Herren Straus (violin) and Hannemann (viola), Mr. H. Smith (cello), and Mr. Midgley (piano).

The Huddersfield Choral Society gave Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" on the 16th ult., with Miss Norton, Madame Mudie-Bolingbroke, Mr. H. Beaumont and Mr. Barrington Foote as principals; the singing of the latter gentleman being certainly the feature of the Concert. The choral numbers were, however, given with power and finish, under the able control of Mr. Joshua Marshall, the Society's Conductor. Mr. H. L. Parratt rendered efficient aid upon the organ.

The usual Easter performances of Bach's "Passion Music" were given at the Leeds Parish Church on the 16th and 20th ult., when the choir was reinforced by female voices. The accompaniments were excellently played by Dr. Creser.

The success of an Organ Recital in the Leeds Town Hall by Dr. Spark, the Borough Organist, at which the programme was entirely composed of Wagner's works, has induced him to announce a series of "Hours with the Great Composers"; and at the Recital given on the 17th ult. the writings of Handel were selected from, the same programme being repeated on the 20th. The next performance will be confined to Bach's works. As these Recitals are free to the public, and very numerous attended, the value of this policy on the part of Dr. Spark is undoubtedly great, and the educational results must prove beneficial.

EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY MUSICAL SOCIETY.

THE sixteenth Annual Concert took place on the 16th ult., before an appreciative audience. It should be said that the development and progress of this institution are traceable to the sustained efforts of its president, the Professor of Music, to whom belongs the credit of having been able, year after year, to induce 200 young men of this University to give time to the drudgery of choral practice, and to have achieved that result shows influence and popularity which are only obtained by one thoroughly and unselfishly in earnest. The programme on this occasion was at once interesting and attractive, and an excellent book of words, with historical notes, was provided, prepared by the Professor with his wonted skill and care. The concert opened with Costa's arrangement of the National Anthem, which proved most effective. It seems invidious to make selections from the other choral pieces, which were all so excellently rendered, but we may specially name Lützow's "Wild Chase" (Weber), where the echoes for horn were effectively introduced. "Home they brought her warrior dead" (Oakeley), originally written as a solo, and now arranged as a chorus, with magnificent harmonies and instrumentation, received an enthusiastic encore. The Scotch songs were given with vigour and true martial spirit; and full of grandeur was the Warriors' Chorus from "Ernani." Strict attention was paid throughout to the various degrees of light and shade, and the attack was always certain. The pianoforte pieces consisted of a Romance in F sharp (Oakeley), worthily coupled with Henselt's popular and fanciful Etude in the same key. Both pieces were excellently played by Mr. Crook who, on being encored, gave Mendelssohn's "Frühlingslied." The Nocturne in B major ("Il Lamento") and Polonaise in A major (Chopin), well selected for contrast, were played by Mr. MacEwen with much delicacy of touch and sympathetic feeling. Mr. Sneddon most efficiently rendered Mozart's "Non più andrai" and a charming Serenade by Sir H. Oakeley, the latter receiving a well-deserved encore. Mr. Watson very pleasingly sang "When other lips" (Balfe), and, in answer to the applause of the audience, gave Sir H. Oakeley's "Ad Amore." With the exception of the first, these songs were accompanied by the Professor with exquisite taste. The orchestra acquitted itself well, both in accompanying the choral pieces and in the Symphony and Overtures. Mozart's Symphony in D major, No. 5, has seldom been played in Edinburgh, and we think this is the first time it has been heard in Scotland with flute and clarinet parts, which are Mozart's own, and only published in 1880. The Overture to "Saul" was rendered with decision and true Handelian feeling. This was the first occasion of its being performed in Edinburgh with full orchestra and organ, the latter instrument being well played by Mr. Crook. The Overture to "Zampa," which was brilliantly given, formed a very fit conclusion to a most successful and enjoyable Concert. The members of the University Musical Association and the inhabitants of Edinburgh cannot feel sufficiently grateful to Sir Herbert Oakeley for his unwearied efforts in placing the art which he has made his life study before them in its true position, and also for the many opportunities he has afforded them of hearing the works of the great masters of past centuries worthily expounded by himself and others.

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

THE programme of the Festival to take place in Leeds on October 10 and three following days has now been settled, at least as regards its more important features. There only remains to fill in the songs and other smaller pieces, with regard to which the artists—who are not yet finally decided upon—must needs be consulted. The Festival will open on Wednesday morning with "Elijah," and in the evening of the same day Mr. F. Clay's Cantata "Sardanapalus" will be produced, with Beethoven's Symphony in D and the Overtures to "Die Zauberflöte" and "Lohengrin." On Thursday morning Raff's new Oratorio, "The End of the World," will occupy the first part, followed by a selection from the works of Handel. In the evening programme are Mr. Barnby's new setting of Psalm cxvii.; Mozart's third Motet; Bach's Cantata "O Shepherd of Israel"; and Rossini's "Stabat Mater." Friday morning is entirely devoted to Professor Macfarren's new Oratorio, "King David"; and at the succeeding Concert will be performed Gade's "Crusaders," a short work written by Mr. Sullivan, and the Overtures to "Genève" and "Tannhäuser." Beethoven's Mass in D and Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang" are set down for Saturday morning; the Festival closing at night with the usual Popular Concert. We understand that the committee have not arranged with Mr. Villiers Stanford for a new Organ Concerto, and that the duties of organist during the week will be discharged jointly by Dr. Spark and Mr. Walter Parratt, instead of by Mr. Parratt alone, as has been stated.

"THE REDEMPTION" IN HAMBURG AND MILAN.

THE first performance in Germany of Gounod's "Redemption" took place on Good Friday in Hamburg, at the Stadttheater, which is under the management of Herr Director Pollini. It was believed that the great success which Gounod's new work had obtained in England and America would insure for it a friendly reception in the native country of Bach; yet it was feared by a good many that Gounod's music would not prove severe enough for the requirements of the German musical public, whose feelings might be hurt by the dramatic treatment of the grand religious subject—the last minutes of our Lord. If in spite of all this, then, another decisive success is to be added to those already obtained for Gounod's masterwork, it only shows the greatness of the composer's conception, the exquisite beauty of his melodious strains, and the power of his instrumentation. The performance took place before a large audience, and was in every respect thoroughly appreciated. The chorus of the theatre being numerically insufficient for the rendering of this work, Herr Pollini engaged the services of the Hamburg Bach Choir—a body of 300 voices, and well trained in the performance of oratorio music. The orchestra of the Stadttheater is one of the best and most efficient in Germany, so that with the careful preparation devoted to the work by Herr Kapellmeister Sucher, who also conducted the performance, full justice was done to all the requirements of the Oratorio. The soli were most effectively rendered by the greatest artists engaged in Hamburg, Herren Gura (Jesus), Ehrke and Wolff (the Two Narrators), Frau Sucher and Fräulein Waedermann (soprani), and Frau Peschka Leutner (contralto). The audience being restrained by the force of custom from any audible marks of approbation during the performance, a burst of applause broke forth at the end, and showed that Gounod's work had made as deep an impression upon a large body of attentive listeners in the native country of Bach, Beethoven and Mendelssohn as in the less severe musical atmosphere of England and America. A second performance in Hamburg is being prepared.

The work was also performed, with immense success, at La Scala, Milan, on Good Friday evening. The choruses were sung with the greatest possible precision, and the magnificent orchestra of the theatre rendered the accompaniments with the perfection for which it is so justly celebrated. The large audience listened to the work throughout with reverent attention. Two pieces were encored, and Signor Faccio, the Conductor, received quite an ovation.

A performance of "The Redemption" was announced to take place at Berlin on the following day (Saturday), but was postponed until the 11th inst., in consequence of the sudden illness of the vocalist who was to have sung the music of both the Bass Narrator and the Saviour.

TESTIMONIAL TO PROFESSOR MACFARREN.

THAT during the career of Professor Macfarren he has not only earned a full and extensive appreciation of his high artistic powers, but, by his urbanity and consideration for all with whom he has been connected, a warm and lasting personal regard, was decisively manifested by the overflowing attendance in the Concert-room of the Royal Academy of Music on the 3rd ult., when it was arranged to present a testimonial to him, surrounded by the educational staff and the whole of the students of an Institution over which he so ably presides, and supported by the many who were also desirous of showing their sympathy with the cause. The pleasure of contributing to this expression of feeling was materially enhanced by the consciousness that the recipient of the gift knew nothing whatever of the circumstance until it was announced to him upon the platform; for the secret had been so well kept that, even when entering the room, he was only aware of the desire of his numerous friends to congratulate him upon the advent of his seventieth birthday. The grateful task of handing to the Professor a draft for 800 guineas was entrusted to Sir Julius Benedict, who in an excellent speech expressed the satisfaction felt by all who had subscribed to the testimonial in being thus enabled to show their esteem for so eminent a worker in the art which they mutually loved, and especially referred to his own early friendship with one who had so thoroughly verified in his mature years the bright promises of his youthful days. That this address was often interrupted by emotion may be as reasonably imagined as that whenever opportunity afforded the warmest applause greeted the speaker; and when—after Mr. Evers had read a list of the subscribers—Professor Macfarren rose to return thanks for the kindly words which had been spoken, and the kindly feeling which had prompted them, the audible proof that they but thoroughly embodied the opinion of the vast audience assembled, for some few moments checked his power of utterance. To Sir Julius Benedict he first expressed his gratitude for the prominent part he had taken in a demonstration which he confessed had completely taken him by surprise. Referring to the event which had called them together, he earnestly—but perhaps unnecessarily to those who knew him—said, "I do not feel old, and can only hope that when I have no longer strength to perform those duties which have been to me a loving labour, I may still have the strength to resign." The unstudied and spontaneous eloquence of the Professor's speech deeply moved all hearers; and it was a long time before sufficient silence could be obtained for Canon Duckworth, who, after saying that had an appeal been made to the general public the amount of the testimonial would have been four-fold, proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Randegger and Mr. Evers, who had originated the project, and worked hard and earnestly in carrying it out. A few well-chosen words from Mr. Randegger followed, in which credit was duly given to the many who had so faithfully preserved silence in the matter; and then Mr. Evers, being called upon to speak, expressed his thanks for this public acknowledgment of his efforts, and his hope that any person who had not been applied to for a contribution would at once see that this omission arose not from a slight to the individual, but solely from the impossibility of writing, within so limited a time, to all who would doubtless have been interested in a testimonial to so representative an artist. Mr. Walter Macfarren, in proposing thanks to Sir Julius Benedict, alluded most happily to some of the compositions by which he has earned so honourable a name; and, after Sir Julius had briefly responded, the meeting—which included the most eminent members of the profession in England, and a large number of amateurs and lovers of the art—slowly dispersed.

HISTORY OF THE PIANOFORTE.

A PAPER on this subject, and from a technical point of view, was read by Mr. A. J. Hopkins on the evening of the 7th ult., at the rooms of the Society of Arts, John Street, Adelphi. The chair was taken by Dr. Stainer. The meeting was attended by a large number of gentlemen interested in the manufacture of pianofortes. Before proceeding to the chronology of the subject, Mr. Hopkins in his paper referred to a few facts forming the basis of the principles upon which the instrument is constructed. The first feature is the soundboard, which reinforces the vibration of the strings, in themselves feeble and scarcely audible. The bridge connects the strings with the soundboard. The sound being excited by the striking of the hammers on the strings, the place of contact is of importance, as the crossing streams of the molecules of which the string is composed gather into nodes or knots on being disturbed; and when the pressure slackens the sections of the string between the nodes rise into curves or loops. If the striking place of the hammer is on a loop, less energy is communicated to the string; if on a node, greater energy ensues. If the hammer is hard, and impelled with force, the string breaks into shorter sections, and the discordant upper partials of the string thus brought into prominence make the tone harsh; if the hammer is soft and the force moderate, the partials corresponding to longer sections strike the ear, and the tone is full and round. The soundboard is supposed to follow similar laws. The formation of nodes is helped by the barring of the soundboard, or ribbing crosswise to the grain of the wood, which promotes the elasticity, and has been called the "soul" of stringed instruments. We have here strings, bridge, and soundboard—or belly, as it is technically called—indispensable for the production of the tone, and indivisible in general effect. The proportionate weight of stringing has to be met by a proportionate thickness and barring of the soundboard, and a proportionate thickness and elevation of the bridge. The tension of the strings is met by a framing, which has become more rigid as the drawing power of the strings has been gradually increased. The object of the framing is to keep the strings apart. The near ends are wound round the wrest-pins, which are inserted in the wooden bed called the wrest-plank, the strength and efficiency of which are most important to the tone and durability of the instrument. It is composed of layers of wainscot oak and beech, the direction of the grain being alternately longitudinal and lateral. Some makers cover the wrest-plank with a plate of brass; in Broadwood's Grands it is a plate of iron, into which, as well as the wood, the wrest-pins are screwed.

The earliest mention of the name Pianoforte, applied to a musical instrument, has been recently discovered by Count Valdrighi in documents preserved in the Estense Library at Modena. The reference is evidently to an instrument of the spinet or cembalo kind, and is dated A.D. 1598. From the statements made, there are no means of ascertaining how the tone was produced. The instrument may have been a hammer-cembalo, but a very imperfect one. The opposite view of "forte and piano," contrived by registers of spinet-jacks, is equally tenable. Scipione Maffei's well-known description of the "grave-cembalo col piano e forte," invented by a Paduan harpsichord maker, Bartolommeo Cristofori, was written in 1711. Maffei tells us that in 1709 Cristofori had completed four of the new instruments, three of them being of the usual harpsichord form, and one of another form he leaves undescribed. In these early instruments the action was not complete but there are two Cristofori Grand pianos preserved at Florence, dated respectively 1720 and 1726, in which an improved construction is found; but there is a great difference between the two. In the second, Cristofori obtained the escapement with an undivided key, reconciling the depth of touch or key-fall with that of the contemporary harpsichord by driving the escapement-lever through the key. He had contrived means for regulating the escapement distance, and had also invented the last essential of a good pianoforte action, the check. The mechanism, however, was imperfect, and the pianoforte had to wait for fifty years for a satisfactory regulation of the escapement. Cristofori died in 1731. He had pupils, one of whom made, in 1730, the "Rafael d'Urbino," the favourite instrument of the great singer, Farinelli. The story of Italian inventive pianoforte-making ends thus early, but to Italy the invention indisputably belongs.

The first to make pianofortes in Germany was the famous Freiberg organ-builder and clavichord maker Gottfried Silbermann. He submitted two pianofortes to the judgment of John Sebastian Bach, in 1726, which judgment was, however, unfavourable, the trebles being found too weak and the touch too heavy. Frederick the Great, in 1746, purchased all the pianofortes Silbermann had made. Mr. Hipkins, by obtaining drawings of the action of one of them described by Burney in 1772, and by personal inspection of others at Potsdam, has satisfied himself that in regard to the principles of construction they are all Cristofori instruments—wrest-plank, soundboard, string-block, and action, the harpsichord scale of stringing being still retained.

The Seven Years' War put an end to pianoforte making on the lines Silbermann had adopted in Saxony. A fresh start had to be made a few years later, and it took place contemporaneously in South Germany and in England. The results have been so important that the Grand pianofortes of Stein, of Augsburg, and of Backers—a Dutchman—in London may be regarded practically as reinventions of the instrument. The decade 1770-80 marks the emancipation of the pianoforte from the harpsichord, of which instrument it had previously been deemed only a variety. Compositions about this period appear expressly written for the pianoforte; and a man of genius, Muzio Clementi, who subsequently became the head of the pianoforte business now conducted by Messrs. Collard, came forward to indicate the special character of the instrument and found an independent technique for it.

A few years before this time, the Square pianoforte had been invented, and appears to have been suggested by the clavichord. German authorities attribute the invention to an organ builder, Friederici, of Gera, and give the date about 1758 or 1760. Until more conclusive information can be obtained in regard to Friederici, the Square pianoforte must be considered as the invention of a London maker, but a German by birth, Johannes Zumpe, who began to make his instruments about 1765. After the beginning of the present century, the Square piano became much enlarged and improved by Broadwood and Collard in London, and by Petzold in Paris.

The origin of the Viennese Grand is rightly accredited to Stein, the organ-builder of Augsburg. Owing to inquiries instituted by Mr. Hipkins, a Stein instrument, dated 1780, has recently been discovered. Stein's light and facile movement, with shallow key-fall, resembling Cristofori's in bearing little weight, was gratefully accepted by the German clavichord players. The Viennese school of piano playing and music it engendered, lasted from the time of Mozart's immediate followers to that of Henri Herz, a period of half a century. Stein appears to have made use of the "una corda" shift; and probably by knee-pedals, subsequently by foot-pedals, the following effects were added to the Stein pianos: the harpsichord "harp" stop, which muted one string of each note by a piece of leather, became, by the interposition of a piece of cloth between the hammer and the strings, the piano-harp or celeste; the more complete sourdine, which muted all the strings by contact of a long strip of leather, acted as the staccato, pizzicato, or pianissimo. The Germans further displayed that ingenuity in fancy stops Mersenne had attributed to them in harpsichords more than a hundred and fifty years before, by introducing a bassoon pedal, a card which by a rotary half-cylinder just impinging upon the strings produced a ready twang; also by pedals for triangle, cymbals, bells, and tambourine, the last drumming on the soundboard itself. Several of these contrivances may be seen in a six-pedal Grand pianoforte belonging to Her Majesty the Queen, at Windsor Castle, bearing as maker the name of Stein's daughter Nannette, who was a friend of Beethoven.

After the arrival of John Christian Bach in London, in 1759, a few Grand pianofortes were attempted by the second-rate harpsichord-makers, but with no particular success. Between 1772 and 1776 Backers produced the well-known English action which has remained the most durable and one of the best up to the present day. Backers died in 1776. His intimate friends and assistants, John Broadwood and Robert Stodart, carried out the principle in their early instruments. Stodart appears to have preceded Broadwood in taking up the manufacture of the Grand piano by four or five years. The present pedals were introduced in English and Grand pianos about 1785, and are attributed to John Broadwood. He also overcame the defects in early Grands arising from the inequalities in the bass, where length of string had to be compensated by increased weight and tension. The result was the divided bridge, the bass strings being carried over the shorter division; and the most beautiful Grand pianoforte in its lines and curves that has ever been made was then manufactured.

Up to quite the end of the last century, the dampers were continued to the highest note in the treble. The exact year is not known when the dampers were first omitted in the treble, giving to the instrument a certain brightness or life throughout, an advantage which has secured to the invention universal adoption. The expedients of an untouched octave string and of utilising those lengths of wire that lie beyond the bridges have been brought into notice of late years; but the latter experiment was essayed early in the century by W. F. Collard. From difficulties of tuning owing to friction and other causes, the real gain of these expedients is small, and not worth the cost when we compare them with the natural resources we have always at command in the normal scale of the instrument. The inventor of the damper register opened a floodgate to such aliquot reinforcement as can be got in no other way. Each lower note struck out of the undamped instrument, by excitement of the soundboard, carried through the bridge, sets in vibration higher strings, which by measurement are primes to its partials; and each higher string struck calls out equivalent partials in the lower strings. Even the partials above the primes will excite their equivalents up to the twelfth and double octave. What a glow of tone-colour there is in all this harmonic reinforcement, and who would now say that the pedals should never be used?

The next decade, 1790—1800, brings us to French Grand-pianoforte making, which was taken up by Sebastian Erard. In 1808, he patented an action having, according to the specifications, the "power of giving repeated strokes without missing" "or failure, by very small angular motions of the key itself." Once fairly started, the notion of repetition became the dominant idea with pianoforte-makers, and to this day, although less insisted upon, it engrosses time and attention that might be more usefully directed. Some great players, from their point of view of touch, have been completely opposed to repetition actions. Amongst these are Kalkbrenner and Chopin; and in our own day Dr. Hans von Bülow. Yet the Erard's repetition, in the form of Herz's reduction, is at present in greater favour in America and Germany and is more extensively used than at any previous period.

About the year 1820 great changes and improvements were made in the Grand pianoforte, both externally and in the instrument. The cylinder front was invented by Henry Pape, a clever German pianoforte-maker who had settled in Paris. Who put the pedals upon the familiar lyre is not known. It must have been in the time of the Empire, when a classical taste was predominant.

But the greatest change was from a wooden resisting structure to one in which iron should play an important part. The invention belongs to this country, and is due to a tuner named William Allen, a young Scotchman, in the employ of the Stadts, by whom the patent was eventually secured. James Broadwood was one of the first to see the importance of the invention, could it be transformed into a stable principle. In 1827, he took out a patent claiming as motives the string plate, the manner of fixing the hitch-pins upon it, the fourth tension bar which crossed the instrument about the middle of the scale, and the fastening of that bar to the wooden brace below, now abutting against the belly-rail, the attachment being effected by a bolt passing through a hole cut in the soundboard. This construction of the Grand pianoforte became generally adopted in England and France. Messrs. Erard, who appear to have had their own adaptation of tension bars, introduced the harmonic bar made of gun metal in 1838.

In a Grand pianoforte made in 1847, Mr. Broadwood succeeded in producing an instrument of the largest size, practically depending upon iron alone, and in which the new feature of a diagonal bar was introduced. Some modifications were made in this framing, and from 1852 Broadwood's Concert Grands have had in all one bass bar, one diagonal bar, a middle bar with arch beneath, and the treble cheek bar. This construction, with harmonic bar, and further improvements introduced since 1862, is the farthest advance of the English pianoforte.

Almost simultaneously with these improvements there arose a new development in America, which, beginning with Conrad Meyer about 1833, has been advanced by the Chickering and Steinways to the well-known American and German Grand pianoforte of the present day. It was perfected in America about 1859, and has been taken up since by the Germans almost universally, and with very little alteration. Two distinct principles have been developed and combined—the iron framing in a single casting, and the cross or over-stringing. The latter originated in England, about 1831, and was the invention of Theobald Boehm, the famous improver of the flute. Henry Pape had very soon after made experiments in cross-stringing, and his ideas were adopted by the London maker Tomkisson. The iron-framing in a single casting is distinctly an American invention. It was introduced by Conrad Meyer's iron frame Square pianoforte, but might be traced to the "upright" piano invented by John Isaac Hawkins, an English civil engineer, poet, preacher and phrenologist, who while living at Philadelphia, in America took out an English patent in 1800. Hawkins employed an iron frame and tension rods in the construction of his pianos. The drawback, however, to an unbroken casting is the vibratory ring inseparable from it. The action of the French small uprights of Pleyel, and Bord of the present day is an improvement in various forms of the crank action; the principle of which was the invention of Wornum, who in 1813 produced in London a vertical Cottage piano, and in 1826 patented the crank-action. "Within the last few years," said Mr. Hipkins, "we have seen the general introduction of Bord's little pianino, called in England, ungrammatically enough, a pianette, in the action of which that maker cleverly introduced the spiral spring, and also of those large German over-strung, and double over-strung, upright pianos, which, originally derived from America, have so far met with favour and sale in this country as to induce some English makers, at least in the principle, to copy them."

Mr. Hipkins concluded his historical sketch by remarking that the English firms to whom we are indebted for the introduction of the pianoforte in the last century are, with one exception, Stadts, still in existence. He named Broadwood, Collard, Erard, Kirkman, and, as he believed, Wornum. In Vienna, the firm of Streicher descends directly from Stein of Augsburg. As well-known makers at the present day, he also mentioned Hopkinson and Brinsmead in England, and Bechstein and Blüthner in Germany.

It was a happy thought of MM. Gounod, Ambroise Thomas, Delibes and the other well-known French musicians now associated for the purpose of raising a Berlioz memorial to invite English co-operation. We do not say English help, because France is rich enough and willing enough to provide monumental brass for all her distinguished sons. What the Paris Committee desire is a kind of international recognition of a man whose fame has long been European, and especially recognition by England, the country which received Berlioz so well in his lifetime, and even, as he himself testifies, created within him the hope of settling down amongst her adopted sons. England has not refused to answer the appeal, addressed in the first instance to Mr. Thomas Chappell, and, through him, to representative composers, artists, critics and publishers. The London Committee is now actively at work raising subscriptions, which have already reached a fair amount. It is not desired, we believe, to press for large contributions, but rather for a little help from as many persons as possible, in order to make England's contribution impressive as a general tribute of respect. Our readers will, we hope, take note of this fact, and quickly forward their "mites" to the honorary secretary, or any member of the Committee, so that the act of recognition and the response to Paris may have all the gracefulness that promptitude can impart. We need not plead for Berlioz here. His unhappy life, through failure of contemporary justice, and his remarkable deeds, speak more powerfully than any words. They ask an act of reparation and acknowledgment in terms that cannot be resisted.

The first performance in London, with full orchestral accompaniments, of Mr. A. R. Gaul's Sacred Cantata "The Holy City," written for the last Birmingham Festival, was given in the Selhurst Congregational Church, South Norwood, on Thursday, the 9th ult., when a very favourable impression of the merits and originality of the work was produced. The performance was under the direction of Mr. John Hatchwell, who had collected together a good chorus and an efficient band, both being apparently well under his control. The soloists engaged were Miss Evelyn Bawtree, a soprano of considerable local celebrity; Miss Alice Bocquet, R.A.M.; Mr. Alfred Kenningham, of St. Paul's Cathedral; and Mr. E. Pierpoint—minor parts being assigned to Miss Franklin, Mrs. Yates, Miss Chastenev and Miss M. Winzar. The whole of the solo music was given with much effect; and Mr. Gaul's excellent orchestration received full justice from the band, the wood wind of which was remarkably good. The choral portions were sung with much vigour and precision, "Thine is the kingdom," "Great and marvellous are Thy works," and the chorus for a double choir, "Let the heavens rejoice," being especially worthy of commendation. The Cantata was preceded by Weber's Mass, No. 1 in G, which received a careful rendering. The principal vocalists were the same as in the Cantata, with the exception of Mr. H. C. Thomas, to whom was allotted the bass music; the applause throughout the work, for soloists, band and chorus, amply testifying that the efforts of all concerned in the performance were fully appreciated. Altogether this Concert may be said to have been one of the most interesting given in the neighbourhood for some time, and great credit is due to the church for its enterprise in introducing Mr. Gaul's Cantata for the first time in its entirety to a London audience. Mr. Minns, F.C.O., the Organist of the church, presided efficiently at the organ, and the harp parts were well played by Madame Dryden.

UNDER the able direction of Mr. Arthur Chappell, whose efforts in the cause of classical music are so well known, a sixth series of the Denmark Hill Concerts was successfully inaugurated at the South London Institute of Music, Camberwell, on Thursday evening, February 22. The programme opened with Mozart's String Quartet in B flat, No. 3, the executants being Madame Norman-Néruda, MM. Ries, Zerbini, and Piatti. The association of the names of these capable artists, familiar to every amateur, is sufficient indication of the high excellence of the performance. Chopin's Ballade in A flat was chosen by Mdlle. Marie Krebs as the subject of her pianoforte solo, and resulted in a heartily manifested appeal for an encore, to which the talented pianist responded by playing a Gavotte, dedicated to herself, by Carl Reinecke. Corelli's Sonata in D major was very finely played by Madame Norman-Néruda, and the Concert was brought to a close with Schubert's Trio in B flat, Op. 99, admirably performed by Mdlle. Marie Krebs, Madame Norman-Néruda and Signor Piatti. Miss Beare sang with success songs by Mozart and Sullivan. The second Concert, given on the 2nd ult., was rendered especially attractive by the rentrée of Herr Joachim, whose reception was enthusiastic. The famous violinist's selections, which were perfectly executed, were four of Brahms's well-known Hungarian Dances. Herr Hausmann gained a double recall by his refined interpretation of Boccherini's Adagio and Allegro for violoncello, with pianoforte accompaniment. The remainder of the programme consisted of an excellent performance of Chopin's Pianoforte Sonata in B minor, Op. 35, by Herr Barth, Beethoven's String Quartet, in A, Op. 18, No. 5 (MM. Joachim, Ries, Zerbini and Hausmann), and Brahms's Trio in C major, Op. 87 (MM. Barth, Joachim, and Hausmann). Mdlle. Nordmann was the vocalist. At the following Concert, which took place on the 13th ult., the post of principal violinist was again occupied by the great Hungarian artist, who led with his accustomed skill Schubert's String Quartet in D minor, Op. 161, in which he was associated with MM. Ries, Zerbini, and Pezze. Herr Joachim's solo, which it need scarcely be said was magnificently rendered, consisted of Schumann's Abendlied and a Romance by Beethoven. Mdlle. Marie Wurm was the pianist, and gained warm manifestations of approbation by an artistic performance of Schumann's Fantasiestücke, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4. Rheinberger's Quartet in E flat (Mdlle. Marie Wurm, MM. Joachim, Zerbini and Pezze) concluded the performance. Gluck's "Che farò" and Gounod's "Quando a te lieta" were commendably sung by Miss Mary M'Clean. In the unavoidable absence of Herr Joachim, who had been announced for the Concert of the 20th, the last of the season, the first violin was in the hands of Madame Norman-Néruda, with what success it is unnecessary to add. A perfect storm of applause was evoked and an inevitable encore gained by Signor Piatti's splendid interpretation of a Largo by Boccherini, and the executant's own Bergamasca. The remaining items were Schumann's Fantasiestück, from Op. 126, Mendelssohn's "Lied ohne Worte," book 7, No. 1, and Brahms's Rhapsodie in G minor (Miss Agnes Zimmermann), Schumann's String Quartet in A minor (Madame Norman-Néruda, MM. Ries, Zerbini, and Piatti), and Beethoven's Kreutzer Sonata in A, Op. 47. Miss Carlotta Elliot rendered with marked acceptance songs by Mendelssohn, Taubert, and Arne. M. Zerbini accompanied with his usual efficiency upon each occasion.

PROFESSOR MACFARREN, on Friday, the 16th ult., gave the last of his annual course of four weekly lectures to the University of Cambridge, which he had on the preceding Tuesdays anticipated in the Holborn Town Hall, before the College of Organists. The subject was Bach's sequel to the "Wohltemperirte Clavier, or 24 Preludes and Fugues," and the illustrations were played on the pianoforte on each occasion by Mr. Windeyer Clark. Four lectures on the same subject were also delivered by the Professor to the students of the Royal Academy of Music, which were concluded on the 14th ult., and were respectively illustrated on the pianoforte by the following students of the Institution: Mr. T. B. Knott, Miss Beatrice Davenport, Mr. Charles S. Macpherson (Balfie Scholar) and Miss Margaret Gyde (Thalberg Scholar).

THE performance of "The Redemption" at the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, under the direction of Mr. Charles Hallé, on the 15th ult., resulted in a complete success. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Hutchinson, Madame Patey, Mrs. Warren, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Santley and Mr. Barrow. The band was led by Madame Norman-Néruda, in the absence of Herr Strauss; and Mr. Bradley presided at the organ. In a long notice upon the Oratorio, the Manchester Examiner and Times says: "'The Redemption' is not a work to be understood on a first or second hearing; there are portions of it which at once impress by their majesty and sublimity, others which are no less admirable as examples of dignified simplicity; and throughout we are never allowed to forget the hand of a great original composer, and a transcendent master withal of orchestral resources." Respecting the reception of the work, which was finely performed throughout, we are told: "The Oratorio was followed with great interest; to much of it, indeed, the same sort of reverent attention was given as is observed in a place of worship, and attempts to applaud were more than once hushed. But at the end of the parts there was enthusiastic cheering, and there was an evident desire for a second hearing of the great Ascension Chorus." The attendance was very large, and the Manchester Infirmary, for the benefit of which the performance was given, will doubtless receive a substantial sum. At Liverpool the Oratorio seems to have produced equal effect on its production by the Philharmonic Society on the 20th ult. Here the solo vocalists were Miss Anna Williams, Madame Billinie Porter, Madame Isabel Fassett, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Robert Hilton and Mr. John Bridson—Mr. W. T. Best presiding at the organ. In describing the work, the Liverpool Mercury says: "Listening to the gradual development of the story of the Passion, Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of the Saviour, as placed before us in 'The Redemption,' one feels the full significance of the simple words which Gounod has chosen to describe his Oratorio, 'Opus vitæ meæ.' . . . Its intense individuality separates it from all other works designed to illustrate subjects drawn from that inexhaustible source, the Scriptures, and in its very simplicity lies the force with which it narrates, with true dramatic sequence, the momentous events of Gethsemane and Calvary." The work was most ably rendered, especially in the elaborate orchestral details, and Herr Max Bruch proved himself an excellent Conductor. At Swansea, where the Oratorio was given on the 12th ult. by the Choral Society at the Albert Hall, a great effect seems to have been produced on the audience. The Cambrian says: "They came to hear and criticise; they remained to wonder and applaud; and went away to admire." The execution of the work is spoken of in the highest terms, and the principal vocalists—Miss Mary Davies, Madame Isabel Fassett, Mr. Harper Kearton and Mr. Frederic King—were much appreciated. The choral and orchestral effects appear to have created a profound impression.

THE death of the pianist, Léopold de Meyer, at Dresden, on the 6th ult. will be heard of with sincere regret by many who knew him as one of the most brilliant executants of the absolute "virtuoso" school, and apart from that, a genial companion, full of wit, humour, and acute observation. De Meyer, in certain respects, was at the head of the so-styled "virtuosi," and in happy moments could caricature their respective individualities with surprising adroitness, accompanied by such thorough bonhomie as to disarm the most jealous of the illustrious fellowship. Those who have heard him take off Liszt especially, for example, whether as pianist or composer, will not easily forget evenings so agreeably spent. De Meyer first came to London in 1844, and achieved singular success in his peculiar line of "virtuosity," affecting and aspiring to nothing else, but never failing to win ardent champions of his almost unsurpassed ability in the school to which he avowedly belonged. He subsequently went to the United States, where, in New York, he was unanimously applauded—so much so as to induce him to visit other American cities. De Meyer's habitual residence was in Vienna; but he has on several occasions revisited London, where he was always heartily welcomed, both for his professional talent and his attractive social qualities.—Graphic.

PROFESSOR JULIUS STERN, who died recently at Berlin, will chiefly be remembered by the famous Gesang-verein, which he founded nearly forty years ago, and which bears his name. It occupied, in the musical life of Berlin, a position analogous to that held by the late Sacred Harmonic Society in London, with the difference, however, that its programmes were not limited to sacred music, and, indeed, comprised most of the important works of classic and of modern art. For Stern always kept pace with the progress of music, and it was this circumstance which gave vitality to the Society conducted by him to the last. The first Concert of that Society has almost historic significance, for it was there that Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was, in October, 1847, introduced to the Berlin public. The Oratorios of Handel, the Masses of Bach and Beethoven also, were heard at Stern's Concerts in model performances. In addition to his choir, Stern conducted one of the best Conservatoires of Berlin, founded in 1850, in conjunction with Kullak and Marx, who, however, soon seceded from the original institution. The concerts of the Berlin Sinfonie-Kapelle were also for several years under the leadership of Stern, who was one of the most prominent figures of the German metropolis. Stern was born at Breslau in 1820, and studied music at Berlin under Mawiser, Ganz and St. Lubin. In early life he resided for some years in Paris, where he conducted a male chorus, mostly made up of Alsations, and, among other German works, introduced Mendelssohn's "Antigone" music to the French public. In 1846 he returned to Germany, and settled at Berlin, never to leave it again for any length of time.—Times.

WE quote the following letter from the Academy of the 24th ult.: "Ealing, March 17, 1883.—The founder of modern music was born at Halle, in the duchy of Magdeburg, on February 24, 1684. On the hundredth anniversary of his birth a commemoration was celebrated in Westminster Abbey, the place of his burial, when a company of 525 vocal and instrumental performers was collected, by whom some of his choicest works were given to large and distinguished audiences. The gross receipts were £12,736; and, after the expenses were paid, the balance was divided between the Society for the Relief of Decayed Musicians and the Westminster Hospital. As the second century will expire next year, it seems appropriate that the general interest felt in music nowadays should find expression in a similar Festival. Every lover of true music must share the admiration felt for Handel by Haydn and other subsequent masters, especially by Beethoven, who used these enthusiastic words:—

Handel is the unequalled master of all masters. Go! turn to him, and learn, with such scanty means as he possessed, how to produce his great effects.

The resources of modern art could present the works of Handel on a worthy scale; and the money realised would form an enduring monument of the benevolence of a composer who, during his lifetime, contributed, by the performance of one oratorio, more than ten thousand pounds to a single charity.—H. G. KEENE." This suggestion only requires to be made known to arouse the enthusiasm of all music lovers in this, Handel's adopted country.

THE members of the Belle Sauvage Glee Union gave their usual monthly Smoking Concert at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet Street, on Wednesday, the 7th ult., Mr. J. Hamer occupying the chair. The part-songs were "Summer Eve," "Foresters, sound," "The Happiest Land," "When evening's twilight," "What ho!" "At Andernach," "The Young Musicians," and "The Skipper's Song" (by the musical director, Mr. C. H. Hewitt). All were fairly rendered, the last-mentioned being encored. The soloists were Mr. R. Flegg, Mr. Wheatley, Mr. S. W. Beckley, Mr. W. Cate, Mr. G. W. Turner, and Mr. W. Syckelmoore. Mr. G. F. Bruce accompanied throughout, and contributed two pianoforte solos with his accustomed success.

ON Wednesday evening, the 7th ult., a "Service of Praise" was held at the Presbyterian Church, Colebrooke Row, Islington. The programme included organ solos, hymns, and Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, "As the hart pants," the solos in which were excellently sung by Miss Emily Paget, R.A.M. Mr. Fountain Meen presided at the organ.

THE applications from candidates for the fifty scholarships to be first awarded in the Royal College of Music, have now all been received. They number 1,581, from 160 places. Of these 1,581, seventy-eight are from Scotland, forty-seven from Wales, forty from Ireland. The preliminary examinations were fixed to take place at the various centres, beginning at 9.30 a.m. on the 28th ult., before the examiners, and at the localities chosen by the various corporations, vestries, and local boards. At a few places the number of candidates is so great that the examinations will have to be prolonged for several days. The candidates will in all cases be taken in the order in which their applications were received at the office as shown by the number of the candidate's instructions and the list supplied. The names of the candidates passed by the preliminary examiners will be forwarded to the College, and the final competition will take place there before the professors, beginning on the 16th inst.

THE St. George's Glee Union gave a very successful Concert at the Picnic Rooms on the 2nd ult. The programme included selections from "The Last Judgment" (Spohr), "Hear my prayer" (Mendelssohn), "In that day" (Sir George Elvey), "God, Thou art great" (Spohr), &c. The solos were efficiently sung by Madame Marian Stringer, Miss Clara Myers, Mr. H. Parkin and Mr. Thurlay Beale. Miss Myers also contributed "He was despised" (Handel), and "O rest in the Lord" (Mendelssohn); Mr. Thurlay Beale, "Nazareth" (Gounod) and "Why do the nations" (Handel); and Mr. H. Parkin "In native worth" (Haydn). The choruses, under the direction of Mr. Joseph Monday, were well rendered. The accompaniments were played by Miss E. Mahon, at the pianoforte, and Mr. F. R. Kinkead at the harmonium.

THE choir of the Chapel of the Lock Hospital, under the direction of Mr. Walter Wesché, gave a very successful Concert at the schools in connection with the Church on the 15th ult., when Leslie's Anthem "Have mercy, O Lord" was well rendered. The efforts of Mrs. Atherton Furlong, Miss E. Sprague, Mr. Eugene Maas, Mr. Atherton Furlong and Mr. Sidney Sprague (vocalists), Miss Nora Peache (violin), Mr. Richards (organ), Mr. Russell Lochner and Mr. Wesché (pianoforte) were also much appreciated. The last-named gentleman played Weber's Concertstück (the accompaniments on the second piano and the organ), and being recalled twice, gave a Nocturne of his own composition. The room was well filled.

THE performance of Gounod's "Redemption" at the Bow and Bromley Institute, on the 6th ult., was in every respect a marked success. All the tickets had been disposed of long before the evening of the concert; and the earnest attention of the audience throughout the Oratorio proved that the appreciation of high-class music at the East-end of London may now be confidently relied upon. The principal vocalists—Miss Anna Williams, Mrs. Bradshawe McKay, Mr. William Shakespeare and Mr. Arthur Oswald—were thoroughly efficient, and the choruses were most effectively rendered by the Bow and Bromley Institute Choir of 130 voices. The work was ably conducted by Mr. W. G. McNaught, A.R.A.M.

THE second Concert of the Cecilian Musical Society for the present season was given at the New Town Hall, Hackney, on Thursday, the 1st ult. The programme included A. C. Mackenzie's Cantata "The Bride." The work was much appreciated, the duet for soprano and tenor, "Why droop thy head, my sweetest"? well rendered by Miss Nellie Oxenham and Mr. J. Macdonnell, being encored. The remainder of the programme consisted of a miscellaneous selection, the vocalists including Miss Marion Jones, Miss Kate Howard, Mr. G. J. Tattersall, Mr. C. E. Fearn, and Mr. C. Jones. Miss Glynn gave a fine rendering of Mozart's Fantasia in D minor. Signor Baràthy conducted.

THE Kyrie Church, under the direction of Mr. Malcolm Lawson, sang Mozart's Requiem Mass, and Beethoven's "Engedi" in St. James's Church, Ratcliff, on Wednesday, the 7th ult. The soloists were Miss Alice Trevenna, Miss Clara Myers, Mr. A. Montagu Shepherd, and Mr. Albert Orme. Mr. E. H. Turpin presided at the organ.

THE twentieth of the series of Boston Symphony Concerts, given on February 17, was in memoriam of Richard Wagner, and, with one exception, the programme was devoted to the works of the deceased composer. An audience of over 3,000 assembled, and the hall was decorated with Wagner's portrait framed in laurel and crape. Herr Georg Henschel conducted. We subjoin the programme: Prelude ("Tristan"); Lohengrin's Legend and Farewell; Siegfried Idyll; Elisabeth's Greeting to the Hall of Song ("Tannhäuser"); Introduction, and Pogner's Address ("The Mastersingers of Nuremberg"); Prelude ("Parsifal"); Scena and Aria ("Oberon"); Weber; Death March ("Götterdämmerung").

A SECOND performance of Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm, "Lord, how long wilt Thou forget me?" was given as part of the evening service at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, on Thursday, the 8th ult., under the direction of Mr. H. J. B. Dart, Organist of the church, Mr. A. A. Yeatman presiding at the organ. The solo was exceedingly well sung by a chorister from the Temple Church choir, the choruses being sustained by the members of the St. John's choir, slightly augmented for the occasion. Organ Recitals have also been given at the church during the past month—namely, on the 6th ult. by Mr. W. G. Wood, Organist of Christ Church, Woburn Square; and on the 15th ult. by Mr. H. J. B. Dart.

THE success of "The Redemption" in America has been decisive. In New York it has been performed three times, on December 6, 15 and 16; in Brooklyn twice, March 2 and 3; in Philadelphia twice, January 26 and March 14, and in Boston once, on January 29. At the latter place it was announced to be repeated on Good Friday, and again at a Festival in May. Performances are arranged to be given in Baltimore and Pittsburg in April, and in the latter part of this month Mr. Theodore Thomas starts on a concert tour through the west, extending as far as San Francisco, during which the work will be given at various places en route.

MR. FREDERICK STEVENSON gave a performance of Gade's "Psyche," at the Rink Hall, Blackheath, on the 2nd ult. The part of Psyche was taken by Miss Ambler, and that of Eros by Mr. Wm. Webster, jun. There was an admirable orchestra, led by Mr. Carl Jung. The choruses were exceedingly well sung. The programme also included Schubert's Overture to "Rosamunde," Professor Macfarren's part-song "The Three Fishers" (encored), and Mr. Stevenson's new song "Many years ago," sung by Miss Ambler, and enthusiastically redemanded. Mr. Stevenson conducted. Hofmann's "Melusina" and Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron" are announced for May.

THE Choir of the Kyrle Society gave, under the conductorship of Mr. Malcolm Lawson, a performance (in a rather curtailed form) of Handel's "Messiah," at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, on Wednesday evening, the 21st ult. The soprano and contralto solos were sung by Miss Edith Phillips and Miss Clara Myers respectively, and the tenor and bass by Messrs. J. F. Probert and Albert Orme. The chorus numbered over fifty mixed voices, and was, together with the soloists, grouped around the organ in the western gallery of the church. Mr. E. H. Turpin presided most efficiently at the organ.

THE Service Book of the London Gregorian Choral Association, compiled for the Society's Annual Festival which is to be held at St. Paul's Cathedral, on May 10 next, has already been made public, and bears evidence of the same careful preparation which has characterised its predecessors; although the omission of the recessional, or more properly retrocessional, hymns seems already to have sorely exercised the minds of several members of the Association; the omission is, however, defensible on the grounds both of ritual correctness, ancient usage, and, we may perhaps add, common sense.

An interesting and instructive Lecture, forming part of the educational course of the Surrey County School of Music, was given at Gresham Hall, Brixton, on Wednesday evening, the 14th ult., by Herr Emil Behnke, upon "The Human Voice as a Musical Instrument."

THE North-East London Choral Society gave the second Concert of the season, at Morley Hall, Hackney, on Tuesday evening, the 13th ult. Mendelssohn's Organ Sonata No. 1 was played by Mr. John E. West, A.C.O., after which Gade's Cantata, "The Erl-king's Daughter" was performed, the solo parts being sustained by Madame Clara West, Miss Coyte Turner, and Mr. C. Prickett. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, the above-named artists being assisted by Miss C. Wollaston, Miss Lottie West, and Mr. Sinclair Dunn. Mr. L. B. Prout and Mr. W. West were the accompanists, and Mr. West conducted.

A SPECIAL Lenten Service was given in the Church of All Saints, Clapton, on the 6th ult., when the sacred Cantata "Christ and His Soldiers" was performed, under the direction of Mr. John Farmer, the composer, who conducted on the occasion. The choir of All Saints' was augmented by contingents from those of St. John's, Hackney, and St. Edmund, King and Martyr, Lombard Street. The solos were sung by Master Dott, Mr. J. R. Hodgson, and Mr. Alex. H. S. Burnett. The work was ably rendered, and proved in every way a success. Mr. W. M. Wait, Organist and Choirmaster of All Saints', presided at the organ.

THE Academical Board of Trinity College, London, offer the following prizes for 1883: For a Chamber Music Composition (adjudicator, Sir Michael Costa), ten guineas and a gold medal; for an essay on "The Use of the Orchestra in the Services of the Church" (adjudicator, Mr. E. H. Turpin), a gold medal; for a Choral (adjudicator, Dr. W. H. Longhurst), three guineas; Musical History Essays (adjudicator, Mr. W. H. Cummings), three guineas and two guineas. The regulations respecting these competitions are now ready, and may be had on application to the Secretary of the College.

THE Upton Choral Society gave its opening Concert on Monday evening, February 26, at the Stratford Town Hall, under the direction of Mr. J. Proudman. The first piece was Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, in which the solos and recitatives were finely rendered by Miss F. A. Jones, the choruses being well sustained by the members of the choir. The programme included a selection of songs and part-songs, all of which were excellently given. The other solo vocalists were Miss Brough and Mr. Atherton Latta, who were well received. Mr. F. C. Kitson presided at the pianoforte.

ON Monday, February 26, Dr. Bridge's Cantata "Boadicea" was performed at the Highbury Athenaeum by the Highbury Philharmonic Society, under the direction of the composer. The part of Boadicea was sung by Miss Lucy Carreras, that of the Centurion by Mr. Vernon Rigby, and that of the Druid by Mr. Bridson. The second part of the Concert comprised Mendelssohn's Piano-forte Concerto in G minor, and Van Bree's "Ode to St. Cecilia." The choruses were effectively rendered, and the orchestral accompaniments efficiently played throughout.

A DECIDED change for the better has been made this year at Westminster Abbey in the services in Holy Week by the admission of music, hitherto banished throughout the six days, to its usual and proper position at each service. Anthems appropriate to the season have been sung at the morning services, and each afternoon a movement from Haydn's "Passion" has been given, the whole Oratorio having in this way been performed. Another year it will, we hope, be found possible to dispense with the organ, at least on Good Friday.

THE series of "Smoking Concerts" given by the "Ebony Glee Union," at the Restaurant, Westminster Chambers, was brought to a close on Saturday, the 10th ult., when a well-arranged programme was creditably performed before a numerous and appreciative audience. Mr. G. Winny accompanied and also contributed a pianoforte solo.

MR. J. F. BOARDMAN, the Organist of St. Saviour's, Herne Hill, has recently been presented by the junior members of his choir with a compact edition of the works of Shakespeare and the standard poets, as a token of appreciation and esteem.

At the recent competition for the "Llewellyn Thomas" gold medal, for declamatory singing, at the Royal Academy of Music, there were eighteen candidates, and the medal was awarded to Alexandra Ehrenberg. The examiners were Messrs. Maybrick, J. G. Patey, and Wilbye Cooper (Chairman). The "Santley" prize, a purse of ten guineas, for accompaniment on the pianoforte, was gained by Alfred Izard, the examiners at the competition being Messrs. J. Li Calsi, J. B. Zerbini, and W. Ganz (Chairman). There were seven candidates.

ON Good Friday evening "The Messiah" was performed in the Victoria Park Congregational Church by the North-East London Choral Society and friends, assisted by an efficient band. The principal vocalists were Madame Clara West, Miss C. Wollaston, Miss Lottie West, Mr. C. J. Murton, and Mr. C. Prickett; Conductor, Mr. John E. West, R.A.M., A.C.O.; leader of band, Mr. Lewis; trumpet obligato, Mr. Davin; organist, Mr. W. West. The audience numbered about 1,500.

MISS AGNES ZIMMERMANN announces three Chamber Concerts, to take place at the Royal Academy of Music on the 19th inst., May 8, and 24. The programme will include Brahms's New Trio for Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello; Rubinstein's Quintet (Op. 99); C. Villiers Stanford's Sonata for Pianoforte and Violin; Agnes Zimmermann's Third Sonata for Pianoforte and Violin; Schumann's Fantasia (Op. 17); Bach's Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, &c., &c.

DURING the last month Herr Pauer has delivered two Lectures at the London Institution on Beethoven's Sonatas. The second Lecture, on the 24th ult., was devoted to the later Sonatas, illustrated by the performance of the "Characteristic Sonata," No. 26, Op. 81; the Sonata in E major, No. 30, Op. 109; and No. 32, Op. 111. The theatre of the Institution was densely crowded, and the audience remained to the end absorbed in attention to the music and the Lecture.

ON the 4th ult., after the evening service, Spohr's "Last Judgment" was performed at the Church of St. Clement, Eastcheap, by the members of the choir. The soloists were Masters Pinks, Harris and Taylor, Messrs. Hagon, Probert and Penson. Mr. F. Knight, Choirmaster, conducted. The Oratorio was most efficiently rendered. Mr. J. A. Jopp presided at the organ. The offertory was in aid of the choir fund.

ON Wednesday evening, the 14th ult., a Concert was given at the Holborn Town Hall, the proceeds being devoted to the organ repair fund of St. James's Church, Clerkenwell, Mr. J. Robinson, the Organist, presiding at the pianoforte. The artists were Madame Ernst, Miss Emily Paget, R.A.M., Miss Lavinia Walker, Miss Josephine Cravino, Mr. Henry Guy, Mr. G. A. Potter, and Mr. Paget, vocalists; solo violin, Mr. Frank Arnold, R.A.M.

ON Monday, the 19th ult., the Oberon Quartet gave a very successful entertainment in the Lecture Hall of Westminster Chapel, Buckingham Gate. The programme consisted of songs, part-songs, and recitations by Messrs. Nicholls, Parker, and Tritton. The soloists were Mrs. Wilson, Messrs. Kingston, T. M. Frost, T. Richard and W. P. Richards. Mr. David Woodhouse and Mr. G. Herbert Ely presided at the pianoforte.

A PERFORMANCE of "The Messiah" took place before a crowded audience at Stamford Hill Congregational Church on Wednesday evening, the 21st ult. The solos were taken by Miss Mary Beare, Miss Eliza Thomas, Mr. Alfred Kenningham, and Mr. Thomas Kempton. Mr. Fountain Meen accompanied throughout on the organ, and Mr. O. Notcutt, Organist to the Church, conducted.

A CONCERT by the Orchestral Class at Trinity College, London, conducted by Mr. George Mount, was given on the 19th ult., when Kalliwoda's Symphony in F minor, Mendelssohn's "Son and Stranger" Overture, and Beethoven's "Prometheus" Overture were performed. Pianoforte Concertos were played by Miss Alice Snudden and Miss Mary A. E. Pettifer, and songs contributed by Miss Jeanie Rosse and Mr. Edward Levetus.

THE Cantata written by Mr. J. H. Gower, for his Doctor's degree, and performed in the Sheldonian Theatre, Oxford, on February 28, is highly spoken of by the local press, the Oxford Review and Undergraduate's Journal describing it as containing "continuous evidence of musical talent of a high order." On the occasion of the performance the solos were rendered by Miss Kathleen Grant, Miss Dones and Mr. F. Lewes Gower.

THE portraits of Handel by Denner, of Dr. Arne by J. Zoffany, R.A., and of Joah Bates and Miss Harrop by F. Cotes, R.A., which recently belonged to the Sacred Harmonic Society, were purchased at Christie's, on the 3rd ult., by Mr. Henry Littleton, of Westwood House, Sydenham, who is already the possessor of the Roubillac statue of Handel.

Marie Vagnolini, Miss Edith Daniel, Mr. Branscombe, Signor Frassini, Mr. J. L. Kitcat (violin), Miss Ellen Bliss and Mr. James Broadbent (pianoforte).

THE University of Cambridge has conferred the honorary degree of Doctor in Music on Mr. C. Hubert H. Parry. Mr. Parry is, we believe, engaged upon a second Symphony, which he is writing for the Cambridge University Musical Society, and which is to be produced at their Concert on June 12.

WE understand that a Committee has been formed by the friends and well-wishers of Sir George Elvey, Mus. The co-operation of all who are interested in this movement is earnestly invited.

A SELECTION of Sacred Music was given in the West Kensington Park Wesleyan Chapel on the evening of Good Friday. The choir rendered the choruses with precision and feeling, and the soloists acquitted themselves much to the satisfaction of the audience.

WE regret to record the decease of Mr. Adolph Gollmick, composer of pianoforte pieces, well known in this country, Germany and Australia. His death occurred on Wednesday, the 7th ult., and his funeral took place in Kensal Green Cemetery on the following Saturday.

REVIEWS.

Welt-Ende. Gericht. Neue Welt. Oratorium nach Worten der heiligen Schrift Zumal der Offenbarung Johanns, von Joachim Raff (Op. 212).

[Leipzig: Breitkopf und Härtel.]

IF this be Raff's "Swan's Song," as there is reason to believe, then nothing in his artistic career became him like his final effort. The Oratorio is an earnest and, in many respects, a noble work, worthy of the great Yorkshire (Leeds) Festival at which it will be produced. We hope to show this in the course of a review that must necessarily be lengthy. If it prove tedious also, let the fault lie at our door.

The book of the Oratorio deals with its tremendous subject in simple yet effective fashion. It brings the seer of Patmos before us and makes him tell again the story of his visions. There is no other personage. St. John speaks, and the art of the composer strives to illustrate or depict the scenes, as they follow each other in magnificent procession. The book is divided into three parts, entitled as above; the first, "Welt Ende," being sub-divided into four sections—viz.: the "Vision of John," the "Apocalyptic Riders," the "Question and Thanks of the Martyrs," the "Last Signs in Nature and Despair of Men." In the first section we have the vision of the book sealed with seven seals, and of the Lamb who alone was worthy to open it. The second section, we need hardly say, deals with the three horsemen, of whom the last was Death. Next comes the vision of the Martyrs, with their cry, "How long, O Lord," and their thanks for gracious consolation; while the fourth section shows the convulsions of nature and the anguish of those who entreat the mountains to fall upon them. In the second part, "Judgment," we see the great angel and hear the trumpets of doom. The quick and dead stand before God, and the lost and saved express their despair and joy. The third part, "Neue Welt," reveals a new heaven and new earth, and sings the praises of their Creator; the whole ending with the Benediction, "The grace of our Lord be with us all, Amen." We may add that the words are taken from the Apocalypse, with here and there a passage from other parts of Holy Writ.

As regards the musical treatment of the subject, some general remarks are called for. In the first place great prominence is given to the orchestra as an independent means of expression. Besides the Introduction (which is brief), there are no fewer than eight movements for instruments alone, some of them extended ones, and all of them meant to serve as musical pictures of definite scenes. Such a lavish employment of the orchestra is new to oratorio, but we need not point out that the idea here expanded is at least as old as Bach and Handel, each of whom introduced a "Pastoral" movement into his greatest sacred work. Next, we find a pronounced and positive use of the leit-motive, or representative theme. Raff, however, confines himself to three or four such subjects, and uses them in a fashion so simple and direct that they help to make the music significant rather than confuse it. In the third place, the composer, while working out his instrumental movements with conspicuous freedom, adheres to orthodox form where the voices are concerned. Most of the choruses, indeed, are contrapuntal, in the old-fashioned manner; and the entire work may be regarded as a curious and interesting attempt to combine methods which have come down to us with others developed in our own day. Such, briefly stated, are the more salient features of the Oratorio. Let us now go on to details, premising that the pianoforte score before us contains no guide to the orchestration.

The work opens with an orchestral introduction (Adagio), 67 bars long, in the key of E major, common time. It has two themes, both important; the first being a leit-motive, the second simply reappearing in the final Benediction chorus. The leit-motive is used throughout in connection with the Divine Being, and, that the repetition of sacred names may be here avoided, we will call it the Throne theme. It is announced in octaves at the opening, and compels attention by its solemn, dignified character:—

The second, or Benediction, subject quickly appears—

but this is treated fugally. Then we have the Throne motive a second time, harmonised in C sharp minor, followed by a brief stretto of the second subject, and an equally short coda. Passing on without break, the Throne theme reappears in its original key, attended by sustained chords from the acuter instruments. This introduces St. John (bass), who takes up his parable with the words: "And I saw in the right hand of Him who sat on the Throne a book sealed with seven seals," the narrative continuing as far as "And I wept much because no man was found worthy," &c. The passage is set in—if the term may pass—semi-recitative; that is, the phrases have a recitative form, but are sung in measured time, with orchestral accompaniment, and interludes, occasionally of a descriptive character. An air, "Lord, hear my voice when I cry" (Larghetto, A flat), follows, and, as far as its purely classic form goes, might have been written by Mendelssohn, whose method it suggests in other respects. We subjoin the opening bars of the voice part only, since they suffice to show the character of the air:—

The Apostle, having ended his prayer, resumes the narrative; telling of the Lamb who came and took the book out of the hand of Him that sat upon the throne. Reference to the Lamb is twice interrupted by a short phrase—destined soon to reappear, while the mention of the Throne brings in once more its representative theme. St. John proceeds to speak of the angels' song, "Worthy is the Lamb," which directly follows, set in chorus for three sopranos and contralto, and leading off with the phrase just quoted. The theme is introduced fugally, but this contrapuntal form is not long maintained, the brief number continuing and ending with simply harmonised ensemble passages of beautiful effect.

We now pass to the section entitled "The Apocalyptic Riders." The Seer announces his narrative with the issuing forth of the white horse, bearing one armed with a bow. This apparition is attended by an orchestral figure—carried on without pause into an Intermezzo entitled "The Pestilence," throughout which it is continuously heard. Raff's authority for connecting "Pestilence" with the horseman who went forth conquering and to conquer is not quite clear, but we need not discuss the point. As for the Intermezzo, an Allegro in D minor, it may be described as a series of wailing chromatic progressions, the extreme parts, as a rule, moving by semi-tones. No quotation need be made, save of the Coda, which is a passage representative of Death. We shall meet with it again and again:—

Certain features in the accompaniment to the next Recitative have a character which leads us to expect them again, and they duly appear in a second Intermezzo entitled "War" (Andante, A minor). The subjoined extract shows the constant rhythmical figure of this movement, and also the leading theme:—

There is a second subject, having the following as its principal melodic forms:—

No. 8.

No. 8a.

With the materials above indicated and some episodic matter, including conventional trumpet-passages, the composer builds up his descriptive piece, finishing, as in "Pestilence," with the Death motive (Ex. 6). That "War" is appropriately vigorous and stirring cannot be denied. In performance it may reveal other and higher qualities. At the close St. John resumes his narrative, and we see the rider of the black horse issue forth, bearing the balances. Then follows a third Intermezzo (Quasi-Andante piu mosso, B minor) entitled "Famine." This movement, though marked by varied effect, the product of varied treatment, has really but a single theme, and here it is:—

No. 9.

The impression of a subject so wailing in character, and attended, presently, by a crowd of chromatic harmonies, is easy to imagine. As in the two previous cases, the solemn music of the Death theme forms a Coda. Again the Apostle resumes, telling now of the pale horse, ridden by Death and followed by Hell. This is, as it should be, the most impressive of all the recitatives. The motive just referred to is conspicuous in accompaniment, as is another passage preceding the reference to Hell, which it may be taken to represent:—

A fourth Intermezzo follows (Allegro, E minor) and is called "Death and Hell." It faithfully exemplifies the character of the entire work, as far as the Oratorio is a compound of strict scholasticism and free expression in the most modern manner. First we have the Death theme, treated contrapuntally, with "augmentation" and "diminution" secundum artem. The composer, however, soon finds this irksome, and throwing off his self-imposed bonds, indulges in the "wild shriek of liberty" to which he has elsewhere accustomed us. There is yet a method in what he does, for the Hell theme, now made more chromatic—dominates the orchestra, and gives a kind of sinister consistency to its shrieks and groans. From such wild turmoil to the recitative telling of the fifth Seal and the "noble army of martyrs" is a change indeed—no less welcome than pronounced. So far, one brief number excepted, all the music has been for bass voice and orchestra. We hail, therefore, the introduction at this point of a Chorus of Martyrs (Andante, F minor) "Lord most holy." Like most of its fellows, it is contrapuntal and opens, fugally, with the subjoined bold theme:—

No. 12.

After brief treatment of the foregoing, a longer and more melodious theme is announced by the basses—

No. 13.

How long dost Thou not judge and our blood not a - venge on them, on them that dwell on the earth. . . How and also developed in fugue form, the original subject presently returning by way of Coda. The recitative then resumes with the text "And white robes were given unto them," after which follows a second Chorus of Martyrs (Allegro, F major), "We thank Thee, Lord, Almighty God." The leading motive here begins in vocal unison, after an orchestral introduction—

No. 14.

We thank Thee, Lord, Al - migh - ty God, but is soon treated contrapuntally. It constitutes by no means the most striking part of the Chorus, since there are at least two episodes of remarkable power and impressiveness, to which, if space allowed, we should call particular attention. These passed, the theme above quoted reappears in stretto, and a brief though fine Coda ends the section. Coming to the final sub-division of Part I, we experience the relief of hearing a solo voice which is not bass. A contralto declaims the passage "Thrust in thy sickle and reap, for the time is come for thee to reap, and the harvest of the earth is ripe." Moreover, it follows up the recitative with an air (Adagio, D major), "Great and wonderful are Thy works," that claims to rank among the most beautiful and exalted things in sacred music. Its simplicity, dignity, and reverence are conspicuous throughout, but an idea of all these qualities may be gathered from the opening phrase:—

No. 15.

Great . . and won - der - ful are Thy works.

St. John now proceeds to tell of the great earthquake and the terrible natural phenomena that usher in the "last things." At this point, the orchestra once more comes to the front with a "tone-picture" (Andante con moto, A minor), representing the "Final Tokens."

The kernel of this movement is found in the opening bars—

No. 16. Andante con moto.

and with like use of dissonances and chromatic progressions, varied by rushing quaver triplets and arpeggios, it continues to the end. We do not know that anything more need be said about it. There is no pause or break before the solo voice enters, telling of the despair of men, which presently finds formal expression in a chorus (Allegro, E minor), "Fall on us." Like its predecessors the number is largely contrapuntal. It starts with the following subject, an orchestral counterpoint of quavers being in attendance:—

Fall on us now, fall on us... and hide us.

This is developed with animation and a scholastic effect curiously at variance with modern ideas as to the musical equivalent of despair. Presently, a vocal counterpoint presents itself—

No. 18. SOPRANO.

Hide us from His wrath, His who on the throne doth set.

BASS.

to be soon treated in imitation as an independent theme. The chorus, however, is not entirely of this character, its later pages being devoted to harmonic effects and orchestral colouring of a very striking sort. As a whole the number deserves to rank among the finest in the work. It makes apparent the hand of a master. The Apostle again taking up his story, tells how the seventh Seal was broken and silence reigned in Heaven; how, also, seven angels blew upon seven trumpets. This suggests to the composer a short Intermezzo for those instruments, but as the movement is of a purely conventional character, it need not detain us. We then hear of the Earth and the Sea, Death and Hell giving up their dead, the voice, in the last two cases, being attended by the representative themes, which, however, play a more conspicuous part in another Intermezzo, "The Resurrection" (Adagio, A minor) immediately following. The construction of this movement is curious. In the first place a motive, representing—as we gather from its use in the preceding recitative—the depths of earth and sea, is heard in the lowest part of the bass scale—

pp Adagio.

and continues as a ground bass for thirty-six bars—for twenty bars as above quoted, then with a sullen and slow vibration—which quickens into quavers, triplets of quavers, and semi-quavers, while above all is woven a network of progressions becoming little by little more complicated. At the thirty-seventh bar, the Death motive acts as a ground bass, and then the Hell theme reigns for a like space, after which that signifying Earth and Sea resumes and continues to the end. We shall attempt neither analysis nor description of the music superimposed upon these foundations, for we doubt if the closest study of the pianoforte score would satisfactorily disclose the composer's intended effect. St. John continues, "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God," &c., the recitative leading to a double chorus, wherein the saved and the lost express their trembling trust and mortal dread. Nothing can be simpler than the construction of this chorus, as a quotation from the opening bars of each choir will show. The saved thus begin—and the lost follow on in marked, though by no means dramatic, contrast:—

No. 22.

There are a few short ensemble passages, but generally the plan of the chorus is antiphonal. The effect, we should add, must be great, and all the more impressive because no straining after it appears. Resuming his recitative, St. John describes the Judgment scene, the themes representative of Death and Hell accompanying his reference to the lake of fire. This introduces yet another Intermezzo, "The Judgment" (Adagio, F major). From the midst of a sustained tremolando, high up in the scale of the strings, the Throne theme issues forth, and is obviously meant to embody the invitation, "Come, ye blessed," &c., since it is followed by a series of flowing passages full of grace and beauty, sustained by a tonic pedal, and gradually ascending to the heights, as it were, of heaven. These ended, the tremolando resumes, but now low down, while the Throne theme is heard in sombre tones and in a minor key. Immediately the Hell motive appears, and groanings and wailings pervade the orchestra—

No. 23.

though, happily, not for long. We shall not discuss the taste of all this, nor measure the achievement by the exigencies of so tremendous a subject, preferring to pass on to an Arioso and Chorus of Thanksgiving (Adagio, C major), "Gracious and merciful is the Lord." The Arioso is brief and not especially remarkable, while in the chorus Raff again draws upon his scholastic resources. Here is the subject chosen for strict fugal treatment—and developed with fluency and effect, especially on a long-lasting pedal-point, but without employing the more elaborate devices of the form used. The Yorkshire singers will revel in this chorus. It cannot fail to remind them of the straightforwardness of their favourite Handel.

No. 24.

The last part, "New World," begins with an orchestral movement (Andante, B flat), having three subjects, of which the first is decidedly the most representative, and that alone calls for quotation:—

No. 25.

Andante.

The others present no very marked contrast, but the movement like its forerunners becomes increasingly elaborate towards the end. St. John next recites his vision of the new heaven and new earth, former things having passed away. After this, the impersonal voice already heard, sings an air, "Lo! the tabernacle of God is with men" (Adagio, E major). The air is hardly less simple than that sung by the Apostle at the beginning of the work, while it shows an equal regard for orthodox form. Though very melodious and pleasing no purpose would be served by extracts. A chorus of praise and thanksgiving naturally follows (Allergretto, C major), and is developed into a number of great importance. Here the composer, by way of change, makes little use of contrapuntal device, preferring plain harmonised phrases. The second section has, however, a very distinctive feature. Choral-like themes are sung in full vocal harmony without accompaniment, each in turn being echoed by the orchestra, with a vigorous bass counterpoint, as thus:—

No. 26.

Presently voices and orchestra combine in a repetition of the choral prior to a reappearance of the first subject. This number will certainly rank among the finest in the work. Before St. John's narrative is resumed, the Throne theme is heard, leading to a very short recitative, and a bass air (Larghetto, A major) "Lo! I make all things new," in which there are some picturesque and suggestive episodes—a light play of accompaniment, for example, on the words "I will give to the thirsty fountains of living waters," and the clang of victorious trumpets at reference to the reward of him that overcometh. The air is followed by a chorus (Larghetto, E major), "The redeemed of the Lord shall arise and come with singing unto Zion." Imitation is largely used in the first part of this chorus, short, melodious phrases being taken up by voice after voice, while the orchestra binds all together in the most charming manner. Especially may the treatment of the passage "Sorrow and sighing shall flee away" be commended for grace and tenderness. Another chorus follows, but though numbered separately, is a sequel or coda to the first. Its words are: "Come; yes, come. Come now Redeemer," and the music deserves note for its peculiar and impressive harmonic progressions. The Finale of the whole work now appears in the shape of a chorus, "The grace of our Lord be with us all, Amen." This is ushered in by the orchestra with the second theme (Ex. 2) of the Introduction, treated in fugue form, and continued till the coda is reached, as quite an independent part of the number. Upon it, however, is imposed the same theme as the vocal fugue, but "augmented," so that we have two fugues with the same subject proceeding simultaneously. An extract beginning with the entrance of the leading voice will show this better than words:—

No. 27.

Theme augmented.

The somewhat extended coda is full of vigour, and ends with impressive effect a remarkable work.

In what Raff's Oratorio is remarkable the reader hardly needs telling, but we may summarise its more striking features: First, the slight use made of vocal arias; second, the vast importance given to orchestral movements; third, the amplified employment of representative themes; fourth, the close association of free, modern writing for the orchestra, with contrapuntal choruses of the old-fashioned type. For the discussion of these points as well as for determining the place of the work, a better opportunity will arise. Enough now, if attention has been secured for a serious and musicianly effort.

Colomba. A Lyrical Drama in Four Acts, founded on Prosper Mérimée's Tale by Francis Hueffer. Composed by A. C. Mackenzie. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

EARLY in the current month Mr. Mackenzie's Opera is announced for production at Drury Lane. The importance of this event has been already indicated, but it may be well before giving a synopsis of "Colomba" to note in what respect its appearance is significant of a new departure in English dramatic music. It is the first opera by an English composer produced in England that is at all representative of the great revolutionary movement in operatic composition which had been gathering force and influence for nearly a century. This was not so much a revolt against the Italian opera as the expression of a genuine yearning for a rapprochement on the part of the composer towards the dramatist. The first notes of the approaching conflict were tentatively sounded by Gluck when he wrote, in 1773, his famous letter in the Mercur de France, and observed, "Whatever the composer's gifts may be they will never be productive of anything but mediocrity if the poet does not arouse in him that enthusiasm without which the creation of all arts are feeble and insipid." The great men who were prominent actors in this revolution were of distinct types of genius, and the actual sources of the movement were not confined to the narrow limits that have sometimes been assigned them. The classicism of Gluck and the fervid romanticism of Weber and Berlioz were equally enlisted in the cause which received its final impulse and consummation from Wagner. "Colomba" is essentially a modern work. It revives no traditions of English opera, either of the age of Arne or of the more recent revival of Barnett and others. The relative positions of the composer and librettist are not as they once invariably were. Mr. Mackenzie has not looked askance at his "book," or toyed with it and trifled, or compelled it to an unnatural union with his own inspirations. It has been studied till the work of assimilation is complete. Merely to designate Mr. Mackenzie's work as a "new English opera" would be found by the amateur in our native opera to be utterly erroneous. It forms the completest illustration and contains the fullest expression of the progress of modern thought in English music.

The work is divided into four acts, the libretto being from the pen of Mr. Hueffer, who has most effectively dramatised the powerful scenes of Prosper Mérimée's romance. In the place of overture there is a short prelude, and another, rather more brief, occurs before the third act. It is almost unnecessary to add that both preludes are intimately connected with the Opera itself, and that the first is not an afterthought, as is so frequently the case, nor is the second mere irrelevant entr'acte music. The prelude opens with a grave and impressive theme:—

No. 1. Andante moderato e grave. $\text{♩} = 54$.

This receives further elaboration, and then introduces a characteristic leading motive:—

No. 2. 80. un poco meno mosso e tranquillo.

This is again suggested in the finale of the Prelude, following the opening phrases of the noble chorus in the fourth act of the Opera. The curtain rises on the market-place at Ajaccio, facing the sea. From a ship moored to a quay sailors are landing goods and luggage. Savelli, a brigand, and his daughter Chilina, both dressed as peasants, walk from stall to stall among the market folk. A bright and vivacious chorus is heard from the country people, followed by the chant of the sailors at work. The people are thence attracted to a sergeant of marines who is guarding some luggage. After much pressing he informs Chilina that the Count de Nevers, the governor of the island, and his daughter Lydia are about to arrive, accompanied by the Captain Orso della Rebbia, who saved the life of the Count at Waterloo and who is enamoured of the Count's daughter. He is interrupted by Chilina, who asserts that a loftier call than that of love has brought Orso back to Corsica. This the crowd demand to know, and Savelli gratifies them by relating how the father of Orso was murdered by one of the Barracini and how Colomba vowed vengeance over the body of her dead father. At the outset of this recital, the orchestra gives the leading motive (always associated with this murder) as shown in the Prelude:—

No. 3. Andante moderato.

all Pie - tra - ne - ra a - woke . . with fright, . . &c.

Colomba, who is a celebrated improvisatrice, had written a song which had become popular in the neighbourhood and which the crowd now insist upon hearing from Chilina, who, excited by the reminiscences of Savelli, and undeterred by the severity of the law against those who incite others to the vendetta, complies. The highly characteristic and beautiful "Vocero" here follows. From it, it may be observed, is deduced, the second motive (of revenge) heard in the Prelude:—

No. 4. Andante. ♩ = 92.
p

Gen - tle dove, thy voice is sad . . On the tree be - neath my window, Night and day . . I hear thee sing - ing, Hear thee mourning night and day . . What is all . . thy griev - ance, say?

This delicate and mournful melody is interrupted by the gendarmes heralding the approach of the Count and his party. The crowd acclaim the Governor, and withdraw apart. Some tender passages between Orso and Lydia introduce the following love-motive:—

No. 5. p

This motive is repeatedly heard throughout the work wherever Lydia's affection for Orso is displayed, or where it worthily influences the latter. Then succeeds a beautiful duet between the lovers. Lydia expresses her interest in the songs of the people, having heard a Corsican sailor sing one of them at night on the deck of the vessel, and the Count inquires the nature of the song their arrival had interrupted. Savelli reminds Orso, aside, of the law, and also hints that he might do worse than hear the Vocero that Colomba had written. At this juncture a tinkling of bells is heard, and Colomba enters, riding on a mule, and clothed in black, followed by two armed attendants. The brother and sister are about to embrace, when Colomba starts back, and appears to shun Orso, and to be overpowered with grief. A short chorus here most dramatically expresses the bewilderment of all at this meeting. A passionate scene follows in which Colomba recalls to Orso her vow, and his duty of revenge, and Lydia declares to Orso her abhorrence and her resolution never to think of him if he sheds the blood of his enemy. In the following scene Colomba re-enters with Savelli, Chilina, and some villagers from Pietranera. Addressing the villagers, she refers to her brother's return, and expresses her assurance that he will avenge their murdered father. In reply they name her enemy, and give the leading motive always associated with the Barracini:—

CHORUS.
No. 6.

The Bar - ra - ci - ni.

Then, as Colomba sings a few bars of the Vocero, Lydia immediately recalls the melody, and comprehends its fatal import. Then Colomba takes up the Vocero where Chilina had broken off, slowly at first, but gradually her voice swells into a rapturous ardour of passion, calling on Orso to avenge his father. The chorus, aflame with her enthusiasm, shout "Vendetta!" The finale of the act is reached in a Quintet and Chorus of remarkable dramatic force in which varied and opposing passions are finely expressed. Lydia urges Orso not to stain his honour, Colomba triumphs in anticipation, Orso wavers, while Chilina and Savelli encourage him. The accompaniment thus opens in 4-4 time:— un poco più animato.

No. 7. mf

&c.

The second act opens on a green in the village of Pietranera. A large mulberry tree stands in the back of the scene, on which are hung withered garlands of flowers and laurels, while the house of the Barracini is seen to the left facing that of the Della Rebbia. By the side of the tree Colomba soliloquises on the prospect of revenge, and impetuously expresses her compunction in these striking phrases:—

No. 8. Allegro impetuoso. Sadly.
p

But what am I . . that

p L.H.

I to fierce - est com - bat.

This mood is, however, of short duration, for she soon lapses into fatalism, and resolves to wait the course of events. As she passes into her brother's house a number of village girls enter with garlands of flowers and commence to dance a graceful measure to a gradually accelerated time. This is interrupted by the entrance of a young girl bearing a wreath of white flowers which she attempts to hang upon the old tree, while the others endeavour to entangle her in their garlands, dancing to the jocund rhythm of a saltarello. As she, at length, succeeds in suspending her wreath her companions tear down the withered garlands and replace them with their own, at the same time hailing the young girl Queen of May, singing in unison a simple and stately chorus, "Salve, Regina del Maggio; Ave, Regina della Beltà," &c. While this is yet being chanted, behind the scene are heard in gradual crescendo the wild strains of a rustic march, very individual and piquant in character, and a procession of rural musicians, &c., enters, followed by the Count, Orso, the two Barracini, and others. The Count wishes to know the meaning of the picturesque ceremony, which Giuseppe Barracini explains, and the chorus repeats the salutation to the May Queen. The Count then proceeds to express his satisfaction that the feud between the two families of the Della Rebbia and the Barracini is about to be extinguished, and, after some soft words addressed to Orso by Giuseppe (during which is heard once more the motive of murder), the two Barracini and the Count and Orso declare the necessity for reconciliation in a Quartet which seems to suggest the hollowness of the proposed compact by the insinuating suavity of its melody. The partisans are about to make mutual friendly advances, and Orso is on the point of taking the hand of the elder Barracini, when Colomba rushes from the house and throws herself between them, and, in great excitement, forbids Orso to touch the hand that shed their father's blood. The Count requires proof of this charge, and Colomba re-enters the house and returns with Savelli. From this scene to the powerful finale of the act the music is strikingly dramatic in character. Barracini sneers, and throws doubt on the testimony of Savelli, while the brigand, fixing his eye on Giuseppe, repeats his affirmation that he knows the secret of Della Rebbia's death; for though the foul deed was done in the night he asserts:—

No. 9. Con espressione.

Savelli concludes his testimony by presenting Orso with a pocket-book, in which the murdered man had partly written the name of his assassin thus, "Giuseppe Barra—" Colomba turns to Orso, and in increasing agitation points at the Barracini. The proof is enough for Orso, and he rises to the occasion:—

No. 10.

He declares he will not follow the custom of his country, but challenges Barracini to fight with him fairly, while Colomba appears inclined to remonstrate with Orso because of this leniency. In the meanwhile great activity is going on around them. The doors and windows of both houses are closed, shutters with loopholes for guns are fixed, and everything prepared as if to sustain a siege. The curtain falls on a scene of great perturbation and excitement, the adherents of both parties confronting each other in silence, while Orso and Colomba and the Barracini enter their houses under cover of their armed followers.

The third act is prefaced by a short but very graceful prelude worked on the theme of the beautiful "Old Corsican ballad" of the following scene, combined with the sinister "Barracini" motive. The curtain rises and discloses a valley road leading to Pietranera, which is visible not far distant. To the left a large rock hangs over the road, while to the right is a thicket. It is early morning—and the clock of the village church is heard striking the hour. Prior to the rise of the curtain the orchestra prefigures the nature of the scene by some charming idyllic phrases:—

No. 11. Allegretto moderato quasi pastorale.

Orso enters, armed with his gun. He falls into a tender reverie, and anticipates his approaching meeting with Lydia in a Corsican love-song, one of the most original and striking numbers in the Opera, and demanding of the singer considerable executive powers:—

No. 12.

Sitting down by the wayside with his head on his hand, Orso becomes abstracted from all around him, when suddenly Chilina's voice is heard singing an old Corsican ballad (introduced in the Prelude). At first he pays no heed to the singing, but at length the words of warning arrest him and he recognises Chilina's voice. This ballad contrasts remarkably with the song of Orso. It is mournful and full of boding. Both these numbers, through their inherent beauty, should achieve instant popularity:—

No. 13. CHILINA (invisible).

Chilina appears one moment above the overhanging rock, and then disappears still singing. Orso, however, regardless of the warning conveyed in the ballad, breaks forth once more into his song, singing with increased vigour and warmth. He has resolved to meet Lydia at once, and is starting for that purpose when he is confronted by Giuseppe Barracini. An altercation ensues, during which Barracini mocks Orso and confesses that, though he did not actually commit the murder, it was through him that Della Rebbia died. A sudden change occurs in his manner towards Orso, whom he threatens, and raises his hand as a signal to his brother, who from behind a wall fires and wounds Orso in the arm. With his right hand, however, Orso shoots Giuseppe dead, and, after a pause, fires the second barrel at Antonio Barracini, who has incautiously exposed his head above the wall, and kills him also. He then faints from loss of blood and is discovered, lying in the road by Savelli and Chilina, who carry the wounded man away with them into the mountains. The Count and Colomba then arrive on the scene, and soon the whole of the village population appear, showing by their grief or delight to which of the two parties they are adherent. The bodies are laid on biers by the monks, and after the excitement of the discovery has abated, the chorus sing in unison a requiem, the solemn dignity of which follows closely on the very expressive agitato of the finale. Colomba watches the procession of monks and villagers as they disappear, and while the chant of the monks is yet audible she celebrates her triumph in an outburst of great brilliancy and passion, her final cry of "Vendetta!" blending with the "Requiem eternam" behind the scene.

In the fourth act an element of tragedy is introduced that is absent from Prosper Mérimée's romance, which, excepting in some unimportant particulars, has hitherto been closely followed. The music of this act is distinguished by qualities even higher than any preceding it. It possesses an exaltation and dignity of expression, and rare chastity of form. The scene opens in a mountain valley, under the cloud-rack of a storm, and fitfully lit by lightning. Colomba and Lydia on either side are searching for each other. At length they meet, and in a duet of a most engaging melody mutually encourage one another:—

No. 14. LYDIA.

COLOMBA. Cou - - - rage be Cou - - rage, . . cou - rage be with us, with . . us! Van - ish dis-may!
Van - - ish, . . van - ish dis-may!

Colomba then leads Lydia to where Orso lies sleeping in the moonlight on a couch, hid by some rushes. She leaves them and a scene of remarkable beauty ensues. Orso gradually awakens and discovers Lydia who, after many struggles, reproves him for slaying the Barracini, and declares that they must part for ever. Orso asserts his innocence and relates the foul attempt on his life, during which Lydia relents, and as he concludes breaks forth into a strain of rapturous fervour:—

No. 15.

Say . . of Love . . Shall he change or al - ter, Shall he de - cay . . or shall he . . di - min - ish?

Orso replies, and then a duet ensues, from which it were equally futile to quote as to attempt to describe its triumphant rapture. In the following scene Colomba enters hastily, with Savelli and Chilina, bearing the intelligence that the gendarmes are upon them. They undertake to divert the soldiers from Lydia and Orso, but while they climb the other side of the valley the march of the gendarmes is heard, and Orso is finally arrested, to be, however, shortly released by the appearance of the Count. The innocence of Orso is proved, but in the meanwhile Colomba enters, supported by Chilina and a soldier, mortally wounded. As the sun rises upon the scene all kneel about the devoted girl and pray for her in a noble and impressive chorus, replete with profound pathos and the deepest religious feeling.

In the preceding remarks we have but reviewed Mr. Mackenzie's Opera from the pianoforte arrangement. After its representation we shall hope to give a more detailed account, that shall more fully reveal the beauty of the music and its dramatic force.

Ekkehard. Sketches for the Pianoforte, for four Hands, illustrating the novel by Joseph Victor von Scheffel. Composed by Heinrich Hofmann (Op. 57).

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

HOFMANN is fond of writing music to a "programme," and in this case he has hit upon the original idea of taking as his text scenes and situations from a novel. The example may find many followers, and thus deprive poetry of one among its distinctive advantages. There are numerous instances of musical illustrations applied to the sister art of verse; but now prose steps in, and we may soon have pieces suggested by every popular work of fiction as it appears. In view of this, we can only hope that all will be as good as Hofmann's. The sketches before us are six in number, and the first, entitled "Ekkehard's Departure," shows a young monk leaving his convent to become Latin teacher of the Duchess, whom he has learned to love. The movement is an unpretending Allegro in F, easy to play and pleasant to hear, because full of life and buoyancy. No. 2, a Moderato assai leading to Allegro in G, illustrates a little squabble between two female hermits on the duty of psalm-singing, which wearies one but not the other. Here we have a good deal of piquancy and more than a little humour, the movement being full of droll though not demonstrative significance. Amateurs of a sprightly turn will revel in this charming effusion. The Moderato grazioso, which constitutes No. 3, depicts Praxedis, the Duchess's Greek waiting-woman, and is also a gem in its way. It is, so to speak, as roughish as the character that suggested it, yet graceful withal, as one might expect a fair Greek to be. Hofmann's repertory contains few pieces more thoroughly acceptable. No. 4, "The March of the Huns," is a characteristic Allegro in A minor, full of barbaric effects and savage strength. In point of charm, however, it must yield to No. 5 (Moderato, G major), which shows how the people of Hegan took example by the strange dance of a young Hunnish prisoner. Hofmann is here in his most fanciful mood, and a very agreeable mood we find it to be. The movement, indeed, might pair with No. 2 for attractive power. An Allegro maestoso in C, entitled "German Hero Stories," closes the set with a kind of march, not very original, perhaps, but full of vigour and animation. These Sketches are eminently deserving of attention by amateurs, whose convenience they study through their comparative easiness, and whose favourable verdict they cannot fail to gain.

FOREIGN NOTES.

IN nearly all the important towns of the civilised world Concerts in commemoration of Richard Wagner have taken place, with the greatest success; this is an important sign of the acceptance of the much-abused Tone-Poet's great works. Towns distinguished for their musical conservatism, where, during the composer's lifetime, not a note of his music dared to enter the sacred halls, devoted entirely to works of a hundred years' reputation, have not failed to pay their tribute, and have owned the greatness of his genius. Even in France, for which country Wagner did not disguise his aversion, the old feud has been forgotten and Concerts, consisting principally of his compositions, have been given at Paris and elsewhere. It is satisfactory to see that the acknowledgment of his greatness which was denied him by so many during his lifetime is now given him on all sides. Berlin, the capital of Germany, which never showed itself very friendly towards his principles, has given him a memorial by calling one of its streets "Wagnerstrasse," and the Royal Operahouses of Wiesbaden, Hanover, and Cassel, have been directed to have extra performances for a Wagner monument. It has been arranged to give twelve performances of "Parsifal" at Bayreuth on the following days: July 8, 10, 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30. Wagner's great patron, King Ludwig of Bavaria, has undertaken to pay all costs of these representations which may not be covered by the sale of tickets.

The gondola in which Wagner took the air every day has been bought for his widow, and sent to Bayreuth. For the table at which the master used to sit in the afternoon, listening to the military band in the Piazza di San Marco, 300 francs has been offered to the owner, who, however, declines to part with it. Another curious relic, purchased, it is stated, by some hero-worshippers, is the railway truck in which the body was taken from Venice to Bayreuth.

A memorial tablet will be placed by the municipality of Venice on the Palazzo Vendramin Calergi, where Wagner died, and an adjoining street will bear his name.

The Breslau University has created Herr Bernhard Scholz Doctor honoris causa on his quitting that town to undertake his new duties as Director of the Hoch'sche Conservatorium, at Frankfurt, in the place of the late Joachim Raff. The storm which was aroused in that town in consequence of some alterations in the management of this celebrated Institute, on the occasion of this appointment, has abated. The fact of some of the teachers leaving the Conservatorium and opening on their own account a rival institution under the name of "Raff-Conservatorium" has not prevented the securing for the old institution a powerful staff of teachers of world-wide renown, including Madame Schumann, Mlle. Janotha, Herr Stockhausen, Herr Heermann and others.

The new tenor, Herr Bötzel, who was discovered by Herr Director Pollini in Hamburg about a year ago, and raised by him from the ranks (Herr Bötzel was a cab-driver), creates the greatest enthusiasm in the Hamburg Stadttheater. He appears alternately as Lionel in Flotow's "Marta" and Chapelin in Adam's "Le Postillon de Lonjumeau," always before a crowded house. Herr Bötzel has a beautiful voice, and if he can be persuaded to leave the stage for a year or two, and take lessons from one of the celebrated masters of "bel canto," the theatrical world has good reason to hope one for a second Mario.

At Munich a "Wagner Cylcus" commenced at the Royal Opera on the 27th ult. All the musical dramas, with the exception, of course, of "Parsifal," will be performed in chronological order. While this takes place at Munich, the Vienna public will have an opportunity of witnessing an equally interesting "cylcus" of Mozart's Operas, which will be given at the Court Opera. It will commence with "Idomeneo," on the 29th ult., and conclude with "Clemenza di Tito," on the 5th inst.

"Hiarne, King of Song," a posthumous Opera of Marschner, the composer of "Hans Heiling," "Der Templer und die Jüdin," and other works, which are great favourites on the German stage, has met with an immense success at the Royal Opera House in Munich, where it was lately performed for the first time.

At the last Curhaus Subscription Concert in Wiesbaden a posthumous Symphony, by Joachim Raff, entitled "Winter," was performed for the first time. This Symphony completed a cycle of four works which the late composer named after the four seasons, all of which were brought out at these concerts.

The Lower Rhenish Musical Festival will celebrate its sixtieth anniversary at Cologne, during Whitsuntide next. The Festival promises to be a specially brilliant one. On the first day Haydn's "Creation" and Beethoven's "Eroica" will be performed. The programme of the second day will be historical, and will include works from Bach down to modern times, the latter to be principally represented by Brahms, who will play his Second Piano-forte Concerto.

The Duke of Saxe-Coburg has resolved to re-establish the Opera at Coburg for next season. It may be remembered that the Opera Theatre was closed some years ago. The town of Coburg will contribute towards maintaining an efficient company.

We are informed that Herr Joachim has yielded to public opinion so far as to permit the Berlin Philharmonic orchestra to continue its Concerts under Wüllner, in spite of the "advanced" tendencies of that gentleman—"a compromise," a German correspondent writes, "which does credit to both parties."

Theodore Wachtel recently celebrated his sixty-first birthday. He was born in Hamburg in 1823, and made his début in the same city, as Tamino, thirty-four years ago.

Our contemporary the Allgemeine Deutsche Musik-Zeitung contains an interesting article, with many musical examples, on Richard Wagner's Symphony, written by Herr Tappert.

Reinthal's long-neglected Oratorio "Jephtha" was recently performed with the greatest success at Bremen, on the occasion of the composer's Jubilee in that town.

A monument to Spohr will be unveiled on the 5th inst. at Cassel, where the great violinist conducted the opera for a number of years.

Saint-Saëns's new Opera, "Henri VIII.," was brought out at the Grand Opéra in Paris on the 5th ult., and obtained a complete success. The libretto, founded on an episode from the life of the amorous king, is full of interest and dramatic scenes, and the music is on all sides enthusiastically spoken of. The greatest pains and care had been bestowed upon the scenery and costumes, which were both thoroughly historical.

At the last meeting of the "Académie des Beaux Arts" at Paris, the place vacant by the death of Herr von Flotow was filled by the appointment of M. Limnander, who was elected from amongst many distinguished candidates, including Verdi, Liszt, Brahms and others. M. Limnander, who is hardly known in England, is the composer of several oratorios, operas, and other works, none of which have succeeded in finding lasting favour, even in his native country, Belgium.

The news that Charles Gounod had taken the place of Saint-Saëns as musical critic of the Paris paper Voltaire has been contradicted. The celebrated composer simply undertook to criticise his friend's new Opera, "Henri VIII.," in that paper.

M. Lamoureux's famous Concerts at the Château d'Eau came to a close on Sunday, the 11th ult., when the programme, with one exception, consisted exclusively of Wagner's compositions, being a repetition of the Wagner Concert given on the previous Sunday. The aforesaid exception was Liszt's "Fantaisie Hongroise," played by Madame Essipoff.

The Prince of Wales, accompanied by the King and Queen of the Belgians, visited, on the day of his departure from Brussels, the Conservatoire of that town, when a Concert was given by the pupils. The programme included Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture, Finale Haydn's Thirteenth Symphony, an Andante by Mozart and a Cantata by Bach. The Concert was opened by a very expressive rendering of "God save the Queen," which was arranged for the occasion by M. Gevaert, the director of the Conservatoire.

On the occasion of the coronation of the Czar, in Moscow next month, four Operas by Russian composers (Rubinstein, Glinka, Naprawnik and Rinsky-Korsakoff) will be played, and on the day of coronation an orchestra of 1,000 players will perform on the square before the palace.

Mdme. Joachim has been very successful at St. Petersburg, where, at one of her Concerts, she was recalled five times to the platform after Schumann's beautiful lyrical cycle "Frauenliebe und Leben."

The theatre in the town of Arad, the largest and finest provincial theatre in Hungary, was destroyed by fire on February 18.

Verdi has reduced his "Don Carlos" from five to four acts, and in that form the pianoforte score will shortly be published by Ricordi. He is also engaged in writing a new Opera to be called "Iago," the libretto of which is by Signor Arrigo Boito, the composer of "Mefistofele."

In consequence of the recent death of the editor, Signor Guidi, the musical journal Boccherini will no longer be published.

Ponchielli's "Gioconda" has made its way to Barcelona, where it obtained a brilliant success some time ago at the Liceo Theatre.

Professor Julius Stern, founder of the Stern'sche Gesang-Verein, and Conservatorium der Musik, in Berlin, died on February 27. His place will be taken by Herr Robert Radecke.

Leopold de Meyer, the well-known pianist and composer of many favourite pianoforte pieces, died at Dresden on the 6th ult.

The death is announced of Staatsrath Wilhelm von Lenz, the well-known Livonian musical savant and author of "Beethoven et ses trois styles" and of "Beethoven; eine Kunststudie." He died at St. Petersburg, on January 31, at the advanced age of eighty-one years.

The death of Frau Hummel, widow of the pianist and composer J. N. Hummel, occurred recently at Weimar. The deceased lady was in her ninetieth year, and survived her husband nearly fifty years.

Mdme. Rozaut, who created the part of Anna in "La Dame Blanche," in 1825, died recently at Fontainebleau, aged eighty-six, and in full possession of her mental faculties.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I have perused with great interest the article which has appeared in your paper on the above subject. The theme opens out a wide and, as yet, comparatively unworked vein in the study of what may be called—for want of a better name—the science of the arts; and your contributor, as he himself admits, has by no means exhausted his subject.

If you will kindly grant me a little space, I will take advantage of the opportunity which a mention of the subject in your columns offers, and point out what I take to be a most curious affinity between the respective sciences of sound and colour, which occurred to me during a long and simultaneous course of study in music and painting. The idea of a possible analogy or affinity first suggested itself to me on the discovery that each note of the chromatic scale possesses a distinct individuality—a quality which has long been admitted to exist in the case of various keys. I at once thought of the chromatic colour-scale, the contents of which I will give here in the order in which they appear in the rainbow and in the reflection of light from a prism: Violet, Violet-blue, Blue, Blue-green, Green, Green-yellow, Yellow, Yellow-orange, Orange, Orange-red, Red, Red-violet. Of course there are numberless intervening shades of colour between those named, as there are equally numerous degrees of sound between the notes of our tempered scale; but these have nothing to do with my theory, nor do they in any way interfere with it.

Given my twelve degrees of colour and my twelve degrees of sound (the chromatic scale), the next thing to be done was to fit them, so to speak, correctly. Now the richest colour in the scale (I argued) is certainly Purple or Violet, while the richness and fulness of the note, octave, or common chord of G flat, is undeniable. Again, the most soft and mellow colour is undoubtedly Yellow-Green; this would come opposite D flat, a decidedly mellow key, in case I accepted the G flat for Purple. I will not trespass unduly on your space by reciting my various arguments. Suffice it to say that after comparing and re-comparing the scales, I decided upon the following as a solution of the puzzle:—

G flat	...	...	...	Violet.
F	...	...	...	Violet-blue.
E	...	...	...	Blue.
E flat	...	...	...	Blue-green.
D	...	...	...	Green.
D flat	...	...	...	Green-yellow.
C	...	...	...	Yellow.
B	...	...	...	Yellow-orange.
B flat	...	...	...	Orange.
A	...	...	...	Orange-red.
A flat	...	...	...	Red.
G	...	...	...	Red-violet.

(Long after I had come to the above conclusion, I read Herr Pauer's clever treatise on "The Beautiful in Music," and his remarks on "the characteristic qualities of the keys" surprised me agreeably by their accordance with my previously formed opinions on the subject, and their consequent favourable, though somewhat limited, bearing on my theory—limited, inasmuch as I have single notes to deal with, while Herr Pauer treats of keys.)

Presuming, for the sake of argument, that my two scales are relatively misplaced, surely "a method in my madness" will be admitted in the face of the evidence I am about to quote. M. Chevreul, in his treatise on "Colour," says, speaking of the juxtaposition of the binary and primary colours:—

"Red and Yellow accord better than Red and Orange.
Red and Blue accord better than Red and Violet.
Yellow and Red accord better than Yellow and Orange.
Yellow and Blue accord better than Yellow and Green.
Blue and Red accord better than Blue and Violet.
Blue and Yellow accord better than Blue and Green."

A reference to my first table will show that M. Chevreul unconsciously favours the musical interval of a third (a concord), in preference to that of a second (a discord) in every instance. Though this fact may not absolutely prove anything, its significance cannot be doubted.

Blind and foolish attempts have been made from time to time to construct colour-organs, colour-pianos, &c.: but under the somewhat serious disadvantage of the absence of anything like a firm theoretical basis to work upon. In THE MUSICAL TIMES for May, 1881, reference is made to a "colour-organ," which had been constructed in America, and which, upon pressing the keys, projected the various hues of the rainbow upon a screen, starting with C for red, C sharp for orange-red, and so on. It was pointed out by some one who had tested the instrument that the effect on the colour-screen was "just as pretty," whether you struck concords or discords on the keyboard. This statement only displays on the part of the examiner of the organ the most profound ignorance on matters relating to colour, and therefore cannot be accepted as a final settlement of the matter in hand. If our Yankee friend had struck the notes E, F, G sharp, the screen would have displayed a combination which (to put it mildly) would hardly be tolerated on a wall-paper.

In conclusion, if I have not absolutely established a sound and reasonable affinity between sound-waves and colour-waves—if I have not supplied the "firm basis" on which our colour-organ constructors may work, I think I have at least said enough to awaken a keener interest in the important subject of "Music in its Relation to other Arts." If I have done this, my labour will not have been quite in vain.

I inclose my card, and beg to subscribe myself,

Yours very truly,

March 13, 1883.

[We have received a letter signed "A Reader," in which, referring to the leading article of our last number, we are accused of repeating the "thoroughly unfounded assertion that Wagner composed his works after promulgating his theories." Had our correspondent really been a "Reader," he would have seen that we said nothing of the kind. What we did say was that even after the publication of "Oper und Drama" few persons "imagined that he would uncompromisingly put into action a theory of Opera which should aim at revolutionising the works which had for years been accepted by the musical public." We did not require to be told that he had written four Operas before the book alluded to was given to the world, each one, in succession—as we stated—gradually advancing his theories; but the first work in which he boldly threw away his fetters was the "Nibelungen" trilogy, the opinions he had so long entertained being then "uncompromisingly put into action," and this is precisely what we meant by "revolutionising" the works which had been fully accepted by the music-loving public.—Ed. M. T.]

ALRESFORD.—The members of the Philharmonic Society gave a Concert on Thursday, the 18th ult., consisting of sacred and secular music. The sacred part included selections from Farmer's Oratorio Christ and His Soldiers; Stabat Mater (Rossini); and Mozart's Twelfth Mass. The solos were taken by Mr. Robinson and Miss Kate Spary. The secular part included a March by Mr. W. Hill, and Leydel's Waltz "Lebewohl." Mr. C. N. Morgan conducted.

ARBOATH.—Mr. Booth gave a Concert of Sacred Music on Thursday, the 1st ult., assisted by a choir of forty voices. Mr. Booth's solos comprised Gavotte in D (Rameau), Fantasia "Vesper Hymn" (Turpin), and Andante in D (Mozart). Mr. Booth conducted and Mr. F. Booth acted as accompanist. The members of the Musical Union gave a performance of Macfarren's May Day, with orchestral accompaniments, on the 14th ult. The choral portions of the Cantata were well rendered, and the soprano solo "Beautiful May" was excellently sung by Mrs. Smith. The second part was miscellaneous. Mr. Booth conducted.

BATHWICK.—The first part of Gounod's Redemption was given in St. Mary's Church, on Good Friday at the Three Hours' Service. The music was followed with earnest attention by a large congregation, and the delivery of the soli and choruses by the choir was marked by deep feeling and assisted greatly in preserving the devotional character of the work. Mr. Arthur Huff played the accompaniments on the organ with much skill.

BELFAST.—Herr Adolf Beyschlag, Conductor of the Philharmonic Society, gave a Pianoforte Recital in the Assembly Hall, on the 9th ult. The programme was selected from the works of Beethoven, Handel, Sterndale Bennett, J. B. Cramer, Silas, Schubert, Chopin, Liszt, and Weber. Every item was excellently rendered and warmly received. Mr. and Mrs. Louis Mantell were the vocalists. A Concert was given in the large hall of the Methodist College, on the 13th ult., the proceeds to be devoted to the founding of a musical library in the College. The programme was chiefly sustained by the pupils of the College. Mr. B. Hobson Carroll, Mus. Bac., T.C.D., conducted.

BIRMINGHAM.—On the 19th ult. the choir of Unet Street Chapel, assisted by members of the Birmingham Festival Choral Society, gave a performance of The Messiah, under the conductorship of Mr. W. H. Coley. The choruses were well rendered, and the soloists—Miss Lilian Mills, Mrs. Bradley, Mr. Charles Bragg and Mr. Isaac Williams—gave great satisfaction. Mr. W. W. and Mr. J. F. Moseley presided respectively at the pianoforte and organ.

BISHOP AUCKLAND.—A Concert was given on February 28, in the Edgar Memorial Hall, by the band of the Bishop Lightfoot Institute. Conductor, Mr. John H. Brotherton. The programme was miscellaneous, and included a Waltz for full orchestra by Mr. Brotherton, which was rendered in a highly efficient manner. A feature of the concert was the performance of Mendelssohn's Fantasia (Op. 28) by Miss Hendy.

BLAIRGOWRIE.—The Blairgowrie and Rattray Choral Society gave a concert in the Public Hall, on Tuesday, the 20th ult. The first part of the programme consisted of selections from Handel's Zephthra, the second part being devoted to A. R. Gaul's new Cantata, The Holy City (the first production of this work in Scotland). The professional artists were Miss Clara Jowitz, Madame Armystead, Mr. T. Mellor, Mr. Thornton Wood, and an excellent Orchestra under the leadership of Mr. W. Cole. Mr. S. C. Hirst presided at the harmonium and pianoforte, and Mr. George Neil conducted.

BOSTON.—The members of Mr. Gregory's Vocal Society gave a performance of Haydn's "Spring," from The Seasons, and a miscellaneous selection of sacred music, in Shodfriars Hall, on the 14th ult.

The principal vocalists were Miss Lavinia Rowbottom, Miss Philline, and Messrs. Haynes and Dyer, all of whom were well received. Mr. Parker contributed two clarinet solos. Mr. Gregory, Mus. Bac., conducted. Miss Simonds presided at the pianoforte and Mr. Reay, Mus. Bac., at the harmonium. The Concert was very successful.

CHEETHAM.—The third of the Musical Union Concerts for the season was given in the Town Hall, on the 12th ult., when Mendelssohn's unfinished Oratorio Christus was performed. The choruses were well rendered by Mr. Rowley's choir, the intermediate recitatives being sung by Mr. Bentley. In the miscellaneous portion of the programme the solo vocalists were Miss Grindley, Miss Abbey, Mr. Melvin, and Mr. Cannan. Mr. Lyon contributed solos on the flute, Mr. Pettit accompanied on the organ, and Mr. C. E. Rowley and Master Rowley on the pianoforte.

CORK.—The last Concert of the Orchestral Union for the season was given at the Assembly Rooms, on the 11th ult. The chief item of interest was the first performance in Ireland of Mr. F. H. Cowen's suite The Language of the Flowers, which was well played by the orchestra, numbering about fifty performers. Other interesting vocal and instrumental works were included in a programme which was greatly appreciated by the large and fashionable audience. Mr. Ringrose Atkins conducted as usual.

CREWE.—The members of the Philharmonic Society gave, at their second and last Concert of the season, a performance of Judas Maccabæus in the Town Hall, on Wednesday evening, February 28, before a large audience. The principal artists were Madame Lita Jaratt, Miss H. Dutton, Mr. D. S. Macdonald and Mr. H. Rickard. The choral portions of the work were given with remarkable precision, the leading parts being admirably trained by the Conductors, Mr. James. The orchestra, which had been largely reinforced by contingents from the bands of Messrs. Hallé and De Jong, was led by Mr. Homer Hayes. Mr. George Young rendered valuable service at the harmonium.

DERBY.—The members of the Choral Union gave their last Concert of the present season on Tuesday evening, the 13th ult., in the Drill Hall. The works performed were The Creation and The Hymn of Praise. The solo vocalists were Madame Marie Roze, Mr. Barton M'Guckin, and Mr. Henry Pope; Mrs. Gardiner joining Madame Roze in the duet "I waited for the Lord." The works were finely rendered. Mr. J. T. Webb led the band, Mr. S. N. Cox presided at the organ, and Mr. T. Talis Trimmell conducted. Gounod's Redemption is announced for the first Concert of the Society next season.

DEVIZES.—A Concert, in aid of the funds of the Royal College of Music, was given in the Corn Exchange, on Tuesday evening, the 6th ult. The work selected for performance was Haydn's Creation. The solo vocalists were Madame Penna, Mr. E. T. Morgan and Mr. W. Thomas. The band was led by Mr. A. W. Waite. Mr. C. Clarke presided at the organ, and Mr. H. Millington conducted.

EASDALE, ARGYLSHIRE.—The Annual Concert of the Choral Union took place in the Drill Hall, on February 24, before a large and appreciative audience. The first part of the programme consisted of selections from The Creation and The Messiah, which were rendered in a very satisfactory manner, and the second part was miscellaneous. Mr. Duncan Cameron conducted, and Miss Annie Whyte and Mr. George H. Normington rendered valuable assistance at the harmonium and pianoforte respectively.

FARNINGHAM.—A Sacred Musical Festival was held in the Chapel of the Home for Little Boys on Monday, the 19th ult. The programme in the afternoon comprised a large selection from Haydn's Creation, and in the evening a selection from Mendelssohn's Zelf, finely rendered. The soloists were Miss Agnes Larkom, Miss Annie Williams, Mr. Harper Kearton, and Mr. Winn. The choruses were given by fifty voices of the South London Choral Association, under the direction of Mr. L. C. Venables. Mr. W. H. Harper accompanying at the organ. The new organ, by Holdich, was opened on this occasion by Dr. C. J. Frost, who effectively rendered a Pastoral in G by Merkel, an Andante in G by Macfarren, Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in C minor, and Smart's Con spirito ma moderato in C, playing also the piano accompaniments to both solos and choruses.

FOLKESTONE.—On Wednesday evening, the 7th ult., a Sacred Concert was given at the Wesleyan Chapel, under the direction of Mr. H. S. Roberts, who presided at the organ, which was supplemented by a stringed orchestra, led by Mr. J. R. C. Roberts. The vocalists were Miss Mary Beare, R.A.M., Mr. H. W. Schartau, Mr. Bramley and Mr. Rhodes. A miscellaneous programme was excellently rendered.

GIBRALTAR.—The second Concert of the season was given by the Members of the Choral Society in the Theatre Royal, on February 16, before a large and appreciative audience. The first part of the programme was miscellaneous, and consisted of vocal solos by Miss King and Mr. Gartley. Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo Capriccioso was played by Master Relié with considerable ability, and Beethoven's Sonata No. 5, for piano and violin, was faultlessly rendered by Miss Ashton and Senor Lambias. Bennett's May Queen formed the second part. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Relié, Miss Mosley, Senor Calamazo and Mr. Porral. The choruses were excellently rendered, and reflected the highest credit on the energetic Conductor, Signor Labocatta.

GLASGOW.—The members of the Rutherglen Choral Society gave their second Annual Concert in the Town Hall, on the 14th ult. The principal item in the programme was Mr. L. N. Parker's Cantata Silvia, which was very well rendered. The orchestra was led by Mr. Robb, and Mr. McIntyre conducted. The Glasgow Musical Union, under the conductorship of Mr. J. Westwood, T.C.D., L.T.S.G., gave a performance of Handel's Judas Maccabæus in the Grand National Hall, on Tuesday evening the 20th ult. The soloists were Mrs. Christian Williams, Miss Young, Mr. Muir and Mr. Gideon Duncan, and the accompanist Mr. Luther Hall, Organist of St. Stephen's Parish Church. The performance was highly satisfactory, the choir singing with brilliancy and power, and the finish and phrasing evincing careful study and training. There was a large and appreciative audience.

The principal vocalists were Miss José Sherrington, Miss Helen D. Allen, Mr. Bernard Lane and Mr. Thomas Heath, assisted in the quartets by Miss Lennox, Mrs. Munday, Messrs. E. Carter and F. Lyne, members of the Society. Mr. Albert Sykes conducted.

THORNTON HEATH.—On Tuesday, the 13th ult., the members of the Musical Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's Ninety-fifth and Thirtieth Psalms and a selection from Handel's Judas Macabæus, in the Public Hall. The solo vocalists were Miss Bessie Diamond, who gave an excellent rendering of "Wise men flattering," and the Misses Bawtree. Mr. Bawtree conducted.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—The performance of Mendelssohn's Oratorio St. Paul by the Vocal Association, on the 13th ult., in the Great Hall, was in every respect an unequalled success. The principal vocalists—Miss Annie Marriott, Miss Marjorie Burton, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. Frederic King—gave the utmost effect to the solo music, and the choruses, especially "Stone him to death," "Happy and blest," "Rise up, arise," and "O great is the depth," were given with admirable precision. Much of the credit of this excellent performance was undoubtedly due to the exertions of the Conductor, Mr. N. E. Irons, who throughout the work had the whole of his forces well under control. The band of the Royal Engineers, led on the occasion by Mr. F. Hummel (Organist and Choirmaster of St. James's Church), was highly efficient; and Mr. E. C. Clarke ably presided at the harmonium.

WELLINGTON, N.Z.—On January 25, the Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul, a selection from Mendelssohn's St. Paul was sung as the anthem at a Special Choral Service in St. Paul's Cathedral Church. The portions chosen were the Martyrdom of Stephen, the Conversion and the Calling of Paul to the Apostleship, and his Farewell to the Church in the second part of the Oratorio. The soprano recitatives and the airs "Jerusalem" and "I will sing" were excellently sung by Mrs. George Cotterell, the other solo parts being efficiently taken by amateur members of the choir. The fine trumpet passages in "Sleepers, wake" were well played by Mr. Raymond, and the choruses were given with intelligence and precision. Mr. Robert Parker presided at the organ, playing as voluntaries one of Schumann's Pedal Fugues on the name of Bach and the Allegretto from the Lobengrin.

WINDSOR.—A performance of Handel's Jephtha was given at the second concert of the Windsor and Eton Choral Society, on the 15th ult. The principal singers were Miss Madeline Hardy, Miss Jeanie Rosse, Miss E. M. Briggs, Mr. T. W. Hanson, and Mr. F. Bevan. Mr. Samuel Smith conducted; Mr. J. S. Liddle, Mus. Bac., was leader of the band; and Mr. H. R. Coudrey accompanied the recitatives and filled in the parts which required it on the harmonium. The vocalists acquitted themselves praiseworthy, and the choruses, in which the Choristers from Eton College took part, were well rendered.

YASOUL.—Morning and evening performances of Handel's Oratorio Judas Macabæus were given by the members of the Choral Association in the Town Hall, on Tuesday, February 27. The solo vocalists were Miss May Bell, R.A.M., Mrs. Chafin, Mr. E. T. Morgan and Mr. W. H. Houghton. The band and chorus consisted of 100 performers. ORGAN PEDALS for PIANOFORTES

Members of the Musical Profession and Trade are respectfully requested to apply to the Inventor and Patentee for Drawings; full and explicit explanation; also prices of this the most recent and only Patent Action for attaching Organ Pedals to Pianofortes; also prices of Organ Pedals, which are charged (to the Trade) cost price only.

TESTIMONIAL.

Dear Sir,—Being myself an Organist, and having purchased and used for a considerable time a set of your Organ Pedals and Patent Action, I with pleasure and confidence add my testimony to the excellence of the same. The guides as represented by figures 5 and 14 in your drawings, are sure to be admired by all, as they are carefully bushed with felt, which (seeing that all the moving parts are supplied with noiseless cushions), guarantees the action perfectly noiseless and steady when actuated. I consider the repetition equal to any Pianoforte Action, and as your action works on one centre pin only (weights and springs not being used), it draws down the keys with the greatest ease, thereby securing absolute immunity from any extra wear of the pianoforte, great durability to the action, and an accurate response to the lightest pedal touch. I have seen no Action (pianoforte or otherwise) in which the adjusting parts are so convenient and reliable. I find the whole thirty notes on one centre pin equal to any on the pianoforte keys, and the touch of the instrument unaltered. I shall always be happy to recommend your Action. Organ Students and Organists who desire the comforts of home practice will find it invaluable. Yours, &c.,
JAMES SANKEY,
Organist, Free Church, Withnell.

ADDRESS:—

JOHN AINSWORTH,
Inventor and Patentee,
BRINSCLAD, CHORLEY, LANCASHIRE.

CAUTION.—Ainsworth's being the only Legal Patent Action, and also the latest Action brought before the Public, intending purchasers should note that it is the most reliable, and contains every improvement. It is also recommended by the entire musical profession, and as a Perfect Action it is quite unique, and a careful examination of his "Drawings" or Action, as attached to a Pianoforte, is sure to command favour.

SELECTED, EDITED AND FINGERED BY WALTER MACFARREN.LONDON: EDWIN ASHDOWN, HANOVER SQUARE, W.

STABAT MATER

FOR

SOLI, CHORUS & ORCHESTRA,

COMPOSED BY

ANTON DVORÁK

OP. 58.

Paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth gilt, 4s.

TIMES.

"Dvorák's setting of the beautiful old hymn holds its own by the side of its numerous predecessors, identified as these are with some of the most famous names in the history of Italian art, ancient and modern. . . . Besides being adapted to its purpose, Herr Dvorák's music is full of melodious beauty and invention. Melody indeed is its breath of life, and we do not wish to say anything derogatory to the Bohemian composer's merit by owning that Rossini's famous setting of the 'Stabat Mater' was more than once recalled to our minds during the progress of the performance. It need scarcely be added that Dvorák's conception of his subject is infinitely more earnest and reverent than that of his famous predecessor. . . . To sum up, Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' is undoubtedly an original effort of great power, all the more worthy of notice at a time when the clever repetition of musical platitudes is too frequently mistaken for genuine inspiration."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"We might dwell at length upon the rare expressiveness of Dvorák's themes; upon the beauty of his orchestration, the masterful manner in which he moves freely under, without absolutely defying, the 'tyranny of the tone-families,' and the unflinching readiness with which he constantly excites and sustains interest. These subjects must, however, be left for future discussion; our present object being simply to stimulate the amateur's interest by general remarks upon an extraordinary work—one to be accepted as an addition to the masterpieces of music."

DAILY NEWS.

"Replete with individuality and has so much special beauty and power that it cannot fail to greatly extend his already high reputation. . . . And there can be no doubt that Herr Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' is a valuable contribution to modern music that stands in strong and agreeable contrast to the pretentious and vapid manufactures which are so largely forthcoming from so-called composers of the day."

STANDARD.

"The 'Stabat Mater' is a fine work, but it is not to be dismissed in a word, nor, indeed, is it to be spoken about definitively after a first hearing. Dvorák's style is peculiarly his own, and in his setting of the famous hymn he has allowed himself to be guided by no precedent that we know of. . . . The whole work is a production of very great merit, and will assuredly be heard again and again in London."

GLOBE.

"The work is not only admirable as regards melody, harmony, and orchestration, but is a revelation of creative genius. . . . Of the many musical settings of the 'Stabat Mater'—not forgetting the severely grand one of Pergolesi—there is none which so admirably combines musical enjoyment with devotional sentiment as that of Anton Dvorák. It is a work which is certain to become more and more enjoyable on closer acquaintance, and, unless modern musical taste is defective, will henceforth be a prominent attraction in the répertoires of our choral societies."

THE HOLY CITY

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"The work is an honour to English Art, and has elevated its composer into a place of distinction amongst native musicians."—Queen.

"A good sound musical work is this 'Holy City.' I have no hesitation in saying that it creditably represents English art, and does honour not only to the skill but to the judgment and taste of Mr. Gaul."—Daily Telegraph.

"The reception was favourable in the extreme, and the Cantata must henceforth be classed among the successes which the Birmingham Musical Festivals have brought to light."—Standard.

"The 'Holy City' is evidently the work of a thoughtful as well as a clever composer, and should make its mark among thoroughly English productions of a sacred character."—Musical Times.

"We hope and believe that the reception given last night to Mr. Gaul and to his 'Holy City' Cantata will prove an earnest of its popularity and acceptance throughout the length and breadth of the land."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR

NEW PART-SONG. PRICE 3d.

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

This Part-Song, written for, and dedicated to, the Kyrle Society, is laid out in Mr. Gaul's very best manner, and while recalling, for its beautiful effects, his elegant Part-Song, "The Silent Land," the resemblance begins and ends there. Mr. Gaul knows to the very letter the capabilities of the voices he writes for, and one is perfectly safe, even after a single experience only, in predicting a widespread popularity to "The Children's Hour."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

EDITED BY

Mus. Doc., Oxon.

BOOK II.—PRELUDES, FUGUES AND TRIO.

Price Three Shillings.

The second book of the new edition of Bach's Organ Works is more advanced in point of difficulty than the first, and will be found of conspicuous interest. It includes the well-known "Giant" in D minor, the shorter Prelude and Fugue in E minor (a great favourite with Mendelssohn), and an exceedingly effective Prelude and Fugue in C minor, in addition to other less-known but important works. It is a specialty of this edition that a convenient and effective mode of performance is everywhere indicated. Appended to the preface is a suggested metronomic rate for each movement.

LIFE OF MOZART

BY OTTO JAHN

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN

BY PAULINE D. TOWNSEND.

THREE VOLUMES, CLOTH, WITH FIVE PORTRAITS,

AND PREFACE BY GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L.

Price £1 11s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

"Mr. Grove, in his brief and able preface, calls the publication in an English dress of Otto Jahn's famous biography of Mozart 'an event in our musical history,' and his statement cannot be considered an exaggeration. . . . The English public is to be congratulated upon a translation of his monumental effort which may without exaggeration be called excellent. Miss Townsend has done her work with skill and conscientiousness, and we doubt whether a much more careful comparison with the original than we have thought it necessary to undertake would discover many, or any, serious blunders."

DAILY NEWS.

"He (Jahn) has made admirable use of Nissen, with his laborious compilation, and of all other authorities, and he has succeeded in producing a work which is complete without being confusing through excess of detail, and in which the interest of the narrative is not broken by undue reference to other writers who, treating of the same points, have treated them differently and often incorrectly. . . . The work has been well translated, and it is prefaced by a brief but interesting introduction from the pen of Mr. George Grove."

THE ATHENÆUM.

"It is with great pleasure that we are able to speak in terms of the highest praise of the manner in which Miss Townsend has acquitted herself of the by no means easy task of translation. In so voluminous a work as the present it is almost inevitable that a few slips should be found; but those that we have noted are not only extremely rare, but mostly of slight importance. . . . We have done inadequate justice in this review to one of the most important works in the whole domain of musical literature; our excuse must be the absolute impossibility of dealing fully with it within reasonable bounds. We conclude by most cordially recommending it to all who are interested in music, and need only add that the printing and general appearance of the volumes are worthy alike of their contents and of the reputation of the firm which publishes them."

Popular Hymns for use in Church and Home

COMPOSED BY

JOSEPH BARNBY

PRECENTOR OF ETON.

Volume II., consisting of 89 Tunes, of which 30 now appear for the first time.

CONTENTS.

All praise to Him Who built the hills.
Alleluia! the crown is on the Victor's brow.
Alleluia! the strife is o'er.

Break forth, O earth, in praises.

By the Cross sad vigil keeping?

Christian, dost thou see them?

Come Thou, O come.

Come unto Me, ye weary.

Crown Him with many crowns.

Earthly pilgrim, joyful see.

Father! beneath Thy sheltering wing,

Father, here we dedicate.

Father, in Thy mysterious presence kneeling.

From Sinai's trembling peak.

Gentle Shepherd, Thou hast stilled.

Gently, Lord, O gently lead us.

God from on high hath heard.

God, Who madest earth and heaven.

Great Father, from Thy throne above.

He that goeth forth with weeping.

Here, O my Lord, I see Thee face to face.

Honour and glory, thanksgiving and praise.

Hosanna to the living Lord.

How calmly wakes the hallowed morn.

How pleasing is Thy voice.

I lay my sins on Jesus.

If life's pleasures cheer thee,

In sweet content let all the anthem sing.

In time of fear.

It was the very noon of night.

Jesu, my Lord.

Lead us, O Father.

Lo, sea and land their gifts outpour.

Lo, the Bread which angels feedeth.

Lord, in these days of humblest prayer.

Lord of the harvest, Thee we hail.

Lord of the harvest, Thee we hail (another setting).

Lord, the shades of night surround us.

Now God be with us, for the night is closing.

Now, on land and sea descending (Vesper Hymn).

Now the labourer's task is o'er.

Now the light of heaven is stealing.

Now the sighs and the sorrows.

O day of joy, when first the light.

O Food, the pilgrim needeth.

O God the Lord, to Thee we raise.

O Jesu, Light of all below.

O Lord, be with us when we fail.

O Thou, Who in the light dost dwell.

O world! behold upon the Tree.

Oh, walk with God.

Pleasant are Thy courts above.

Praise, O praise our God and King.

Praise, O Sion, thy salvation.

Quiet, Lord, this trembling frame.

Rejoice, ye pure in heart.

Remember Me.

Rest of the weary.

Saviour, again to Thy dear Name we raise.

Saviour, blessed Saviour.

Sing to the Lord a joyful song.

Softly now the light of day.

Still, still with Thee.

Still will we trust.

That day of wrath, that dreadful day.

The day is gently sinking to a close.

The day is gently sinking to a close (another setting).

The foe behind, the deep before.

The Lord be with us as we bend.

The radiant sun declining.

The spring-tide hour.

The valleys and the mountains.

The Virgin stills the crying.

There is an hour of peaceful rest.

Thou knowest, Lord, the weariness and sorrow.

Thou, Who dost build for us on high.

Through the day Thy love hath spared us.

To-day Thy mercy calls us.

To give Thee glory, Heavenly King.

To Thee, O Comforter Divine.

To Thee, O God and Saviour.

Upraised from sleep, to Thee we kneel.

When day's shadows lengthen.

When God of old came down from heaven.

When, His salvation bringing.

When I survey the wondrous Cross.

When the day of toil is done.

Whence shall my tears begin.

Where the mourner weeping.

Ye holy Angels bright.

MASON & HAMLIN AMERICAN ORGANS

SPECIFICATION OF THE "QUEEN'S MODEL"

AS SUPPLIED TO HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

This Organ has been especially manufactured by the MASON AND HAMLIN ORGAN COMPANY, and has been pronounced by competent Musicians "The best American Organ that has yet been produced." The tone, which is very round, full and sweet, is full of religious feeling, and a more perfect imitation of a Pipe Organ is not known.

The Queen's Model is of the full Compass of 5 Octaves, C to C, and contains Three and a half complete sets of Reeds, 16 ft. throughout, 8 ft. throughout, 4 ft. throughout, and a Solo set of Reeds of 16 ft. in the Treble.

NOW READY.—SPECIFICATION of the NEW THREE-MANUAL AMERICAN ORGAN (Mason & Hamlin), used in Westminster Abbey, for the performance of Gounod's "REDEMPTION," on March 18, under the direction of Dr. Bridge, and of which he has been pleased to express his entire approval.

MRS. W. H. MONK earnestly INVITES the AID of kind friends towards placing in Schools and Asylums the bright intelligent Orphan Children of a late clever Organist, who was blind. He was a pupil of Dr. W. H. Monk, who procured for him the post of Organist at Heydour, in Lincolnshire, where for fourteen years he was highly respected. In November, 1881, he died suddenly, leaving a widow and five very young children with no provision whatever, nor any relation to help them. The sad widow has been nobly striving to support herself and her fatherless little ones by daily teaching, but can earn only a scanty pittance quite inadequate even for her own maintenance.

Mrs. Monk will be very grateful to the Governors of the "Vanested Infant Orphan Asylum" for help to gain the May Election, which will be the third application for "Percy Edward Craxford," aged five years.

THE ONLY PATENT ACTION

FOR

Attaching Organ Pedals to a Pianoforte.

CAUTION.

HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT

Have been granted only to the Lever Principle for attaching Organ Pedals to a Pianoforte of which

J. Ainsworth is Sole Proprietor.

The Musical Profession and Trade are therefore cautioned against purchasing and selling any other stated as being a Patent Action, as they will thereby render themselves liable to legal proceedings. Persons who have purchased a Patent Action (so stated) are requested to forward their full address to the real Inventor and Patentee (as below), from whom they will receive a reward.

THE LATEST IMPROVEMENT.

Since the addition of my Improvement (a month ago), whereby the Organ Pedals can be removed and replaced INSTANTLY, the number has risen from 2,670 to 3,503; thus it will be seen that the increase as above will average over 9,990 per annum. The Organ Pedals can also be disconnected with Pianoforte keys (without being removed) INSTANTLY, this being very desirable when Pianoforte pupils are having Lessons or practising on same instrument; and, further, any boy or girl can disconnect the Organ Pedals, there being no possible chance of injury to the Action.

The great success which has attended the above invention is due to its Unique Perfectness, and the fact that it fully supplies a want long felt by organists and organ students, viz.:—

A PLEASANT AUXILIARY ABSOLUTELY FREE FROM ANNOYANCES.

J. AINSWORTH

Inventor and Patentee of the above, also Sole Proprietor, begs to tender his sincere thanks to members of the musical profession and trade for their very liberal patronage, and also to assure them that (having access to the finest and most improved machinery of the present day) the workmanship of Pedals and Action supplied by him shall always be that which is sure to command favour.

STABAT MATER

FOR

SOLI, CHORUS & ORCHESTRA,

COMPOSED BY

ANTON DVORÁK

OP. 58.

Paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth gilt, 4s.

TIMES.

"Dvorák's setting of the beautiful old hymn holds its own by the side of its numerous predecessors, identified as these are with some of the most famous names in the history of Italian art, ancient and modern. . . . Besides being adapted to its purpose, Herr Dvorák's music is full of melodious beauty and invention. Melody indeed is its breath of life, and we do not wish to say anything derogatory to the Bohemian composer's merit by owning that Rossini's famous setting of the 'Stabat Mater' was more than once recalled to our minds during the progress of the performance. It need scarcely be added that Dvorák's conception of his subject is infinitely more earnest and reverent than that of his famous predecessor. . . . To sum up, Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' is undoubtedly an original effort of great power, all the more worthy of notice at a time when the clever repetition of musical platitudes is too frequently mistaken for genuine inspiration."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"We might dwell at length upon the rare expressive-ness of Dvorák's themes; upon the beauty of his orchestration, the masterful manner in which he moves freely under, without absolutely defying, the 'tyranny of the tone-families,' and the unflinching readiness with which he constantly excites and sustains interest. These subjects must, however, be left for future discussion; our present object being simply to stimulate the amateur's interest by general remarks upon an extraordinary work—one to be accepted as an addition to the masterpieces of music."

DAILY NEWS.

"Replete with individuality and has so much special beauty and power that it cannot fail to greatly extend his already high reputation. . . . And there can be no doubt that Herr Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' is a valuable contribution to modern music that stands in strong and agreeable contrast to the pretentious and vapid manufactures which are so largely forthcoming from so-called composers of the day."

STANDARD.

"The 'Stabat Mater' is a fine work, but it is not to be dismissed in a word, nor, indeed, is it to be spoken about definitively after a first hearing. Dvorák's style is peculiarly his own, and in his setting of the famous hymn he has allowed himself to be guided by no precedent that we know of. . . . The whole work is a production of very great merit, and will assuredly be heard again and again in London."

GLOBE.

"The work is not only admirable as regards melody, harmony and orchestration, but is a revelation of creative genius. . . . Of the many musical settings of the 'Stabat Mater'—not forgetting the severely grand one of Pergolesi—there is none which so admirably combines musical enjoyment with devotional sentiment as that of Anton Dvorák. It is a work which is certain to become more and more enjoyable on closer acquaintance, and, unless modern musical taste is defective, will henceforth be a prominent attraction in the répertoires of our choral societies."

A. C. MACKENZIE.

VOCERO

(or Dove Song).

"A formal melody of the most beautiful character, accompanied in the most delicate and tender manner."—Daily Telegraph.

"Not least among such beauties is the Vocero. For this and with this Mr. Mackenzie has done perhaps more than Bizet did for and with the Habanera in 'Carmen.'"—Saturday Review.

"The charming but quaint melody of the Vocero, with its words adapted from an actual Corsican ditty."—Morning Post.

"The Vocero is a charming inspiration."—Sunday Times.

"A delicious andantino."—Daily Chronicle.

"The Vocero is really beautiful."—Weekly Times.

"A perfectly lovely air."—Society.

CORSICAN LOVE-SONG,

"Will she come from the hill, will she come from the valley."

"Another delicious page is the Corsican Love-Song."—Sunday Times.

"A smooth flowing love-song, admirably in harmony with the situation."—Daily Chronicle.

"Orso's love-song is flowing and graceful."—Weekly Dispatch.

"One of the most perfect pieces of melody in the opera."—Society.

OLD CORSICAN BALLAD,

"So he thought of his love."

"So full of character as well as beauty."—Daily Telegraph.

"The song itself is simply lovely, and Mr. Mackenzie has caught the ideal spirit of Schubert's pathetic and lovely lieder."—Standard.

"We like, even more than this, the old ballad which Chilina sings in the same act."—Sunday Times.

"An air that will probably become almost as popular as the oft-heard Vocero."—Daily Chronicle.

"Chilina's Old Corsican Ballad is deliciously fresh and piquant."—Weekly Dispatch.

HERE OFTEN HAVE I SAT

(Tenor Song).

"The beautiful tenor song, 'Here often have I sat,' has all the elements of popularity in its ring."—Echo.

THE

AN ODE FOR MUSIC

BY

WILLIAM COLLINS

SET TO MUSIC FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA BY

ALICE MARY SMITH

(Mrs. MEADOWS WHITE).

Octavo, paper cover, 2s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"Firmness, vigour, and strength mark the treatment of conceptions which are massive rather than graceful and elegant. . . I welcome Mrs. Meadows White's 'Ode to the Passions' as the production of undeniable talent, and a worthy addition to the musical things which, being English, give Englishmen cause for pride."

DAILY NEWS.

"The Cantata displays much musical taste and intelligence, with a considerable aptitude for the use of orchestral combinations, and the work will certainly not diminish the artistic reputation gained by Mrs. Meadows White's previous compositions."

STANDARD.

"Mrs. White's work is honest, straightforward, and legitimate in every acceptance of the term; she aims at producing no sensational effects, but achieves that which is infinitely better—a work which will grow upon the auditor and student alike as a pleasing and highly finished art-product."

ATHENÆUM.

"A work of great merit, and quite worthy of its position in a festival programme. It should prove an exceedingly useful addition to the répertoire of Choral Societies."

SUNDAY TIMES.

"Possesses merit of no ordinary calibre. It is a well-conceived and powerful setting of Collins's poem."

LONDON: NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

ABRAHAMAN ORATORIO

COMPOSED BY

BERNHARD MOLIQUE.

Octavo, paper cover, 3s.; paper boards, 3s. 6d.; scarlet cloth, 5s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"'Abraham' comes to us a second time with perfectly intelligible and graceful speech; moreover it is the speech of a master who knows the spirit as well as the form of his artistic language, and can commend himself to the mind as well as the ear. Every number in 'Abraham' vouches for this, and it will be a marvel if the reward of so much merit does not come sooner or later in full measure. . . In the performance of the selection from 'Abraham,' Hereford has rehabilitated a master upon whom neglect has unjustly fallen."

DAILY NEWS.

"The composer's thorough musical training, his command of orchestral and choral effects and contrapuntal resources, and his forcible declamatory writing, renders the work a good specimen of constructive art. . . It was a step in the right direction to revive an artistic work which has long been unjustly ignored; and which offers so welcome a contrast to the immature and crude manufactures which under the name of novelties so often pass as compositions in these days."

GRAPHIC.

"'Abraham' may be Kapellmeister's music as certain of our advanced instructors insist; but if so we can only retort that Kapellmeister's music is very fine music, and that it would be well if more of such music were vouchsafed to us just now. . . That more of 'Abraham' will be heard ere long may be taken for granted. . . Had he written nothing more than 'Abraham,' where the keenest sense of musical expression and a perfect mastery of counterpoint (without a knowledge of which no musician can give fluent utterance to his ideas), and an unmistakable dramatic instinct are apparent, he would take high rank among composers."

The second book of the new edition of Bach's Organ Works is more advanced in point of difficulty than the first, and will be found of conspicuous interest. It includes the well-known "Giant" in D minor, the shorter Prelude and Fugue in E minor (a great favourite with Mendelssohn), and an exceedingly effective Prelude and Fugue in C minor, in addition to other less-known but important works. READY THIS DAY.

HARMONY

BY

CARL MANGOLD.

The Musical World says: "This concise little treatise commences with the utmost simplicity. The student is tempted to use his musical gifts, however small, from the very outset; begins to compose at once, and is assured that in the algebra of sound he need not, as he feared, forego his imagination, and that his ear may be pressed into the service. Encouraged, he is launched into Harmony and Counterpoint without realising his position, and is taken with a somewhat subtle skill over musical pontes asinorum until he suddenly awakes to find himself actually a harmonist, ready for examination, minus the cramming process. The method by which this result is brought about is novel, and, to the initiated, as profitable as it is interesting."

Figaro says: "A new manual of 'Harmony' just published by Messrs. W. Morley and Co., of Regent Street, merits a few words of notice. It is from the pen of Mr. Carl Mangold, the well-known professor of harmony at the Guildhall School of Music and musical instructor of the Duchess of Teck. The most important features of the little two shilling book are its conciseness and the absolute clearness with which the explanations and definitions are given. Some works on Harmony are so abstruse that the puzzled student soon throws up the whole affair in despair. Mr. Carl Mangold's object seems to have been to interest as well as to enlighten, and the little manual will be most useful for school and class work."

The Liverpool Courier says: "We would commend to the attention of music teachers and students Carl Mangold's complete and conveniently arranged little treatise on 'Harmony' just published by Messrs. W. Morley and Co. Though the work is only about sixty octavo pages, it is the result of a life's study of the greatest writers on counterpoint, his own immediate tutors in the science being André, Rinck, and Hummel. Of course the book is to assist, not supersede, teachers. The author introduces the great rules of counterpoint as a framework for the details of study in harmony, and does his best to simplify the acquisition of thorough bass, excluding such matters as are only of use to advanced students. The treatise is divided into three parts, which are again sub-divided into headed chapters, so that reference to any particular feature is very easy."

"The easiest and best work on harmony yet published."

A MEMORIAL FOR BERLIOZ.

THERE is a peculiar fitness in the formation of an English committee to further the aims of the representative Paris committee in honouring the memory of Hector Berlioz. It remains only to hope that in Russia and Germany the same policy will be followed with regard to the proposed Memorial, and that it will meet with similar success. The warmth with which Berlioz always alluded to the reception of his music in England during his sojourn here, and the generous terms in which he recognised our musical institutions, and acknowledged our national passion for the art, make the request of the Paris committee both natural and opportune. For the same reasons the support of Russia and Germany should be spontaneous and general. It is right that this movement of Berlioz' countrymen should be something better than the blushing act of a shamed posterity. For though the art-work of Berlioz is in the fullest sense monumental, and his genius is placed high beyond the praise of men by the splendour of his achievements, it is appropriate that this laggard act of poetical justice should originate in the city that rejected him. Never was that undefinable quality, that fiery impersonal essence, which we call "genius" more undeniably manifested in man than in him. Yet never was genius more stupidly and, it must be added, more consistently misconceived and maligned. His written accounts of the reception of his works in Paris seem incredible. His memorable description of the first performance, before a shivering and scanty audience, of the incomparable "Faust," reads like a wanton parody. Yet we know these were no exaggerations. Recognition came to him late, and in foreign lands. There was only too much justification for the bitter spirit he showed towards Paris, when he breaks off the chronicle of his success in St. Petersburg and relates how, in the height of his triumph, he turned to the south-west and bowed himself in mock humility, exclaiming "Ah ! chers Parisiens !"

The passionate intensity and excessive sensibility of Berlioz, combined with wit and irony and a literary style of a most individual order, elevate his journalistic writings to the rank of literature. Some of the burning pages of his "Mémoires" are comparable only with such works as Rousseau's "Confessions" and the memoirs of Benvenuto Cellini. In their tumultuous passion they are strikingly akin to the record of the great Florentine, while in many passages they powerfully recall Rousseau's literary expression. In order to fully comprehend the music he composed anterior to "Roméo et Juliette," it is absolutely necessary to study the revelations of the "Mémoires." Up to the appearance of the Shakespearean Symphony he may be said to have expressed in music all of the romance of his existence that defied expression in mere prose. During this period he gave himself up unreservedly to his genius. The purely artistic sense was quite subordinate in him. His wayward imagination ran riot. He wrote symphonies that were defiant of rules and heterodox in form—works, indeed, that come under no category. He seems to have delighted in the wilful commission of innovations. The early portion of his life is reflected in his music with the fulness and faith of a personal confession. Every impression of novel or transcendent interest was musically expressed, even while it was fleeting. The first visit to St. Peter's, at Rome, resulted not merely in the remarkable passage in the "Mémoires" in which he describes his rapturous exaltation, but also in the immense and grandiose "Dies Iræ" of the "Requiem." The first transcript of Berlioz' impressions in this case should be compared with the glory of his final interpretation. His conception of music as the soul of architecture, which so forcibly held his imagination while beneath the dome of St. Peter's, acquires fresh signification and truth in the "Requiem." In the same manner the "Symphonie Fantastique" deals with the most critical period of his life, and in "Harold" he reduced to something like form the chaotic recollections of his vagrant life in Italy. In the former he has given the fullest expression of the revolutionary spirit that animated him. The "Symphonie Fantastique" is certainly not the most perfect work of Berlioz, but it is in many respects the most remarkable, and its position in the history of music is unique. Occupying a place midway between the symphonies of Beethoven and the music drama of Wagner, the "Symphonie Fantastique" is a distinct effort in the direction of the latter, the basis of which is surely discoverable in Berlioz' work. Widely as Beethoven's later symphonies differ from those of Haydn and Mozart, the true symphonic form is preserved in them. Beethoven did, indeed, introduce the chorus, but this innovation does not affect the integrity of the composition. And it is precisely here that Berlioz was most timid, and his attempts were most experimental. His introduction of the chorus in his large symphonic works is effected in the most gradual manner. In order to present the symphony as he conceived it should best accord with his genius he reconstructed it. He seems fully to have felt that the symphony of Beethoven's later period was the most perfect form of instrumental music, and yet in some occult fashion he also felt it was inadequate for his purpose. Hence the "Symphonie Fantastique." He broke through the limitation of Beethoven's form, and in so doing undoubtedly endangered the balance of the different portions of his work and the symmetry of the whole. The terrible mélange of passions in the last part is particularly destructive to its symphonic unity. It is rather the turbulent fifth act of a tragedy than anything corresponding to the last movement of a symphony. It is interesting on another ground, as the earliest example of "programme music," but it differs widely from much that has been composed in emulation of it, in that its programme is not necessary for its elucidation. This is the difference between Berlioz's descriptive symphony and most other "programme music"—the difference, indeed, between genius and mere imitative talent—in the latter the programme exists to supply the deficiencies of the music, in the former it is like the dry commentary of a guide which may be dispensed with without loss. For any one who is once possessed of the idée fixé, the melody associated in the lover's mind with the idea of the beloved, the progress of the "Symphonie Fantastique" is clear. Through all its modulations this idea is evolved in every scene with true dramatic value until the final degradation of the ideal passion is figured in the deformed but still definable idée fixé in the appalling horror of the crescendo of the Marche au Supplice and Finale. Never has music spoken with a more fiery and irresistible eloquence; the programme in connection with it is like the bald argument to a poem, not necessary but prefixed as convenient for reference.

If the life of Berlioz had ended at this period, and the "Symphonie Fantastique" had proved his swansong, he would still have left work of such supreme beauty and character that it would have assured him a high place among musicians; a little solitary, perhaps, and companionless, but still indubitably beyond all need of memorial here. But his best work was yet forthcoming. Hitherto he had given expression to his exuberant sense of life, his passion for movement and colour, his sympathy, in short, for that romantic phase of art of which Alfred de Musset and Hugo were equally representative. With the composition of "Roméo et Juliette" the artist in him becomes paramount. His sense of the beauty of form becomes enlarged, and with it his appreciation of the value of proportion and unity becomes more apparent. The scheme of the "Damnation de Faust" is, it is true, unsatisfactory in this respect. It is neither a symphony nor an opera nor an oratorio. It is scarcely a lyrical drama with chorus, so slight is the connection of its scenes and so arbitrary. It differs notably from "Béatrice et Bénédict," which is perfect in form and a typical opéra comique, and also from "Les Troyens," in which Berlioz returns to his boyish allegiance and once more pays homage to the shades of Virgil and Gluck. Yet it is doubtful if any one other of his works has called forth such universal acclamation. It is certain that if it were necessary to appeal to the English public from any one work of Berlioz for a reply to the incredible verdict of his contemporaries, the "Faust" would be cited. The large audiences that have recently assembled in the Albert Hall to hear this work, and its frequent repetition elsewhere, prove the hold it has acquired here. Nor is this surprising, for there are few compositions in music in which the beauties are more numerous and distinct; and there is assuredly no composition the individual beauties of which are nobler in expression and of such astonishing variety. It is in itself a glorious monument to genius. All projects of brass or stone seem ridiculous by comparison. Yet it is well that the recognition by France of the splendid genius of Berlioz should take the form of a Memorial. Paris owes something to his memory; there is some atonement due for insult and injury inflicted, and for suffering borne not uncomplainingly, perhaps, but with sufficient heroism. There is so much pain in the mere recollection of the existence Berlioz led in Paris, that this last act of justice to the composer naturally assumes a penitential air. To keep alive the memory of Berlioz in Paris might be of immense benefit to that city, if Paris were not still what she always has been—the city of splendid reputation and speedy oblivion.

ON THE SELECTION OF AN ORGANIST.

THE selection and appointment of an organist for a church, be it for the quiet country church, the fashionable and leading church of an important city having ambitious choral services, the collegiate church or chapel, a cathedral in all but the name, nay, perhaps for the cathedral itself, is a matter so often canvassed and a question that must so constantly be presenting itself practically in one or other of its forms before many of our readers, that little or no apology will be necessary for offering here a few remarks on the subject.

First, then, let us say emphatically that of all plans that may be adopted decidedly the worst is, except in the one case hereafter alluded to, the competitive examination and trial system at present much in vogue. And this for several cogent reasons. To begin with, the man really the most fitted for a post of the sort is not at all unlikely to be at the time of the trial the most nervous of all the candidates, indeed the probabilities are much in favour of his being so; as a consequence, then, he may be utterly incapable of playing even decently the fugue or other chosen show-piece that under ordinary circumstances he would execute without a single error, and à fortiori in worse plight still will he be as regards his sight-reading. On the other hand, the imperturbable candidate, who happens to get through the difficulties of the ordeal without a stumble, will on no account be thereby wisely adjudged off-hand the most fit and proper person for the appointment. And if this be true with regard to organ-playing, how much more so with regard to choir-training, frequently made the subject of a similar competition test! The man who will ultimately do real good with a choir will, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, do apparently nothing, or next to nothing, in the first four or five weeks. He must feel his way cautiously, step by step, and ascertain not only the acquirements of those he has to train and their capabilities, but—if possible, more important still—their tempers and dispositions. He knows full well the false step or two at starting to be all but irrevocable; and the influence, on the other hand, gained in the outset to be never wholly lost. But to the man that will give the most apparently successful trial lesson these weighty considerations cannot be taken into account; there must be, from the nature of the circumstances, much of the "slap-dash" style about him and much of the rough-and-ready in his method, which, effective though it may possibly appear on a single occasion, will soon prove anything but desirable when subjected to the test of continuance. But should it be objected, as it possibly may, that these are matters for the umpire to take into consideration at the time of the trial, we reply that, on the contrary, if the trial is to be a trial at all and not a mere sham, the umpire cannot choose but decide on and by that trial, and that certainly it would be in the highest degree improper for him to use private or external knowledge of the powers of any candidate, even assuming the unlikely case of his possessing the same external knowledge of all the candidates. Another consideration is that the very fact of success in a trial of the sort is more than likely to produce in the successful party a feeling of self-satisfaction, the most fatal of all things to true advancement and success. The only case in which a competitive trial is perhaps not altogether to be deprecated, is that of a very young man who has had previously no opportunity of showing his powers or who possesses no friendly assistance to start him otherwise; but then let it be distinctly understood that the post is one for which a decidedly young man is wanted, and let there be no objection to a gentleman even in the trammels of his teens.

It may now be fairly asked, What is proposed and advocated in place of the system decried? There are several ways; we will name two. First and chief, watch a man working at his own post and under unexciting and ordinary circumstances, and of course when he is ignorant that he is being watched—see what he does and how he does it. If you are not able to think of any one whom you can submit to such a test—and this is scarcely likely—ask one or more of the friends that will probably be concerned with you in making the appointment to do so; but if you have no such friends, make the same request to some really eminent musical man to do so on your behalf. And this suggests the second plan which you can try if circumstances forbid your adopting the first, and that is—go straight to some really good and eminent musical man—one, if you will, not given to article pupils—and ask him to fix for you. For his art's sake, provided you have consulted a really conscientious artist, and for his own credit's sake, he will do his best, and if you desire you can offer him the fee you would have had to give to him or to some brother professor for acting as arbitrator at the unhealthy and derogatory trial.

And now a few words on the same subject from the artist's point of view. The elections to the church's more important offices—deacons, canons, rectors, and vicars—are not (save in one or two unhappy instances to which, moreover, scandal always attaches) made by competitive examination; the good appointments are those of the men who have been previously watched in other capacities, and found worthy of advancement. Let the church organist and choir-master, bearing this in mind, decline to let his accomplishments be taken stock of and subjected to invidious comparisons and demeaning tests, and he may rest assured that the more he respects himself (self-respect never being confounded with an over-bearing manner) the more his vicar and those with whom he is brought into contact will respect him, and the more they respect him the more they will respect his office. We would especially urge on the members of the profession of any standing or acquirements the desirability, nay, the necessity, of holding aloof from competitions and trials of all sorts. Let them firmly agree to do this, and those churches, collegiate establishments and cathedrals who desire a really competent and trustworthy artist will soon discover that such men are not to be obtained by the insertion of an advertisement, followed by a ceremony unpleasantly suggestive of the ancient method of engaging domestic servants at a fair. Music is, we need scarcely say, an art, and as such is to be respected and not forced. Least of all is it to be gauged by such means as might be employed to test, say, a knowledge of mathematics; and those members of the profession will best consult not only the honour and dignity of that profession, but also their own real interest and ultimate advantage, who resolutely hold aloof from them altogether. There are no doubt certain men who cannot read an advertisement for an organist, albeit no better terms than their present ones are offered, without putting themselves forward as candidates and probably sending in a formidable array of testimonials kept ready at hand, lithographed or copied, for the purpose. That this arises from an inherent restlessness which is a part of their very nature is no doubt as true as the fact that such men belong, with very rare exceptions, to the decidedly second or even third rate branch of the profession; but upon all such, and particularly upon the exceptional cases, we would strongly urge that greater stability, more quiet perseverance and less self-seeking will assuredly prove to their greater advantage in the end; and scarcely any fact is more certain than that the man destined to rise to real greatness will ultimately do so in spite, we would almost say, of himself.

Having said thus much, it may not, perhaps, be altogether out of place to remark briefly on an appointment not yet filled up, and to which we can therefore allude without impropriety, which has attracted, we believe, the notice of several hundred members of the musical profession—namely, the post of Organist of Salisbury Cathedral. Without alluding to the causes of the vacancy, without even hinting at the divided opinions as to the justice of those causes, we pass on to note a few of the printed conditions subject to which the new appointment is to be made. And first we are met by the altered terms of tenure of the post, which is “to terminate at the pleasure of either party at three months' notice”—utterly unlike, we believe, those of any other cathedral organistship in England or

Wales, one of the leading features of which is their freehold nature, so long as the holder remains fitted, morally and musically, to hold the post. The cathedral organistships have long and properly been looked forward to by able and conscientious artists as a sort of honourable goal which having once secured they may reasonably expect to hold, at their own option, for the rest of their natural lives, in precisely the same manner as do the Deans and Canons their prebends. That such goals exist in all professions is a fact; that they are a mainstay and safeguard of those professions experience has shown, and although it may be in the present case thought to conduce to the more satisfactory and conscientious performance of his duties that the organist should hold his office by the somewhat precarious terms of three months' notice—very similar to those offered to a butler—it does seem a little unfair that a similar incentive to the performance of duty should not also be applied to Canons—may we even say, to Deans themselves? It is superfluous to point out how much the value and desirability of the post is reduced by an alteration of this nature, but it may not be superfluous to suggest for the serious consideration of other appointing bodies whether they would not, by adopting such means as these, very sensibly diminish the probabilities of their ever obtaining the services of the really valuable and desirable men that it would be their undoubted wish to secure. Cathedral bodies are, it must be confessed although with all possible respect, not usually the most harmonious bodies in the world, and even for this reason alone, not to mention the various conflicting interests in the chapter that would be constantly kept alive from without, the tenure of the organist would be of a more fragile nature than may be at first imagined, and in many cases the three months' notice clause would unquestionably be resorted to with alarming frequency. Others of the conditions are remarkable. We quote some:—

That he (the organist) be not absent from any such (i.e., musical) services without the consent of the Dean or Canon in Residence.
That if he obtain leave of absence, his deputy be approved by the Dean or Canon in Residence.

These need no additional comment from us.

That the organist be responsible for the use of the organ, and that no one be allowed to take lessons on the organ except an articulated pupil.

The first part of this condition puts an almost boundless power into the hands of the chapter, and there is no saying to what amount of pecuniary expense the organist might not thereby be rendered liable. One other stipulation is really, we believe, unique:—

That the organist be required to give instrumental lessons to any chorister who desires to learn instrumental music for £5, provided the chorister after six lessons show to the Dean's satisfaction that he has made some (sic) proficiency (!).

What may here be implied by the term Instrumental Music is not altogether clear, but it would be interesting to know to what degree of proficiency, and on which of the twenty or more instruments of the orchestra, the aspiring chorister would be expected to have attained before the munificent dole of £5 became payable to his instructor; it is refreshing, however, to find that in at least one of our Cathedrals the question whether an individual has or has not “made some proficiency” in the art of music is capable of being determined by the decanal mind.

Seriously, these and all such conditions practically can only tend in one direction—the depreciation of the value and dignity of such appointments, and the consequent lessening of the propriety and probability of really eminent and capable men being found to accept them.

Finally, though it may be too late to offer any words of caution or to speak in discouragement of applications in the present case, we would strongly urge on the members of the profession the duty which they owe not less to themselves than to that profession, of heightening the tone of and respect for their calling, by their own self-respect, as shown, among other ways, by their abstaining from entering contests for such positions, particularly on such terms as those we have quoted.

THE GREAT COMPOSERS

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

NO. XIII.—CHERUBINI.

THE stranger in beautiful Florence cannot long remain oblivious of Cherubini. If he wanders towards the south of the town, and stroll in the neighbourhood of the Barriera del Ponte Rosso, he will probably find himself in the Via Cherubini. If, in the course of sight-seeing, he visit the church of Sante Croce, his attention will surely be caught by a large and handsome monument bearing Cherubini's name; while, should his rambles take in a little street called Via Fiesolana, not far from the Piazza d'Azeglio, his curious eyes may light upon a tablet affixed to No. 22, and having an inscription thus translatable:—

"Here was born on the xiv. September, MDCCLX., LUIGI CHERUBINI, who, famous in the science of Harmony, creator of sublime religious melodies, reformed every kind of musical style, and in the regions of art preserved intact among foreigners the glory of Italian supremacy."

A hundred and twenty-three years ago, that house—then numbered 6886, according to the now discarded custom of numbering by districts instead of streets—had as tenants a Signor Bartolomeo Cherubini, his wife, Verdiani (née Bosti), and their nine children. The bread-winner of the family followed the profession of music, not so as to attract men's eyes, but in a humble, if responsible, capacity as pianoforte accompanist (maestro al cembalo) at the Pergola Theatre. Bartolomeo was accounted a good musician, learned in all the learning of the schools, and having the scientific resources of the art at his fingers' ends. Picchianti, Cherubini's earliest biographer, himself a Florentine of the period, describes the Pergola professor as "a chapel-master strongly attached to the old customs of the art, and a rigid observer of the ancient scholastic discipline in his teaching." These words enable us to form a pretty accurate idea of Bartolomeo Cherubini. He would now be called a pedant, a "fifth-hunter," a slave to the "tone-families," and what not else that characterises a man who prefers the old ways to the new. We shall have very little more to say about him here, but it is important to observe what manner of musician he was, since his conservative instincts naturally influenced the training of those committed to his care. Bartolomeo seems to have been a good citizen and an exemplary husband and father. In his domestic capacity he doubtless rejoiced at the frequent additions to his household. Verdiani, his wife, was only thirty-five years old when she presented him with a tenth child, and two others were subsequently born, so that the respectable Florentine professor fully attained the condition of blessedness described by the sacred writer who tells us that "Like as arrows in the hand of a giant even so are the young children." But though the family was prolific, it could hardly have been healthy. Of the twelve sons and daughters, only the tenth child lived to be old, and he, strange to say, was born into the world such a puny thing that his parents often looked with sadness into each other's faces when talk ran upon the babe's chances of life. The weak reed, however, survives the storm which hurls down the sturdy oak, and Bartolomeo Cherubini's tenth infant escaped all the perils and dangers that hung about its cradle.

The child's extreme fragility, let us here say, had something to do with complicating a question that arose in after time as to the precise date of birth. A note introductory to the catalogue of Cherubini's works, and dictated by the master himself, fixes September 8, 1760, as the day when he came into the world. On the other hand, two certificates founded on the baptismal register are in existence, and agree in naming September 14. The authority of these attestations is now accepted, and was acknowledged by Cherubini himself. We lean, however, to the doubt frankly expressed by M. Arthur Pougin, who says: "It is true that Picchianti and M. Gamucci have each published an attestation derived from the baptismal registers of Santa Maria del Fiore; but this double attestation, while giving September 15 as the date of the baptism—about which there cannot be any doubt—appears to fix on the 14th as the date of birth only by natural induction, and the general custom which requires children to be baptised on the day they are born, or the day after. Now the tradition so clearly set afloat by Cherubini himself, and preserved by him in the notice dictated to De Brauchese, can hardly have sprung up spontaneously in his mind; it must have been based on family report—on the assertion of his father, or something of the kind—and I cannot help asking myself why and how it was that Cherubini subsequently abandoned it." We submit that these are reasonable words, although Cherubini, after for many years keeping his birthday on the 8th, changed to the 14th, in deference to the authority of the baptismal register. There must have been some foundation for the belief in which the master remained as late as 1831, and those who accounted for the interval between the asserted date of birth (8th) and the actual date of baptism (14th) by reference to the child's extreme delicacy were, perhaps, not far wrong. As for the baptismal register, we are not disposed to give it great weight in the matter of birth. A hundred years ago, records of this kind were perfunctorily made, and for an indifferent official to assume that the baptised child had been born the day previous was perfectly natural and to be expected.

Concerning the early childhood of Cherubini little or nothing is known, for the reason, it may be, that there is little to tell. The boy no doubt found full scope for his energies in the act of living. We have his own authority for believing that at the age of six he began to study music under his father, so continuing till he was nine. Picchianti tells us what sort of progress was made by the little lad in studies which must have been of the driest character: "Three years were enough for young Cherubini to obtain a sufficient knowledge of solfeggio, and of figured bass accompaniment and the tablature of the harpsichord, as they then called theoretical acquaintance with the keyboard, together with the art of placing the hands, and of the mechanism adapted for playing the instrument. He achieved this result before completing his ninth year, and without, on that account, neglecting the higher study of figures or languages." The poor little boy must have worked hard to do this, for creative genius, though it may supply enthusiasm for study, does not necessarily mean capacity for the accumulation of facts, the retention of rules, and the mastering of problems which demand intellectual perception. Yet we see in the spectacle of a mere baby labouring at the unsympathetic elements of musical knowledge, striking proof of the very serious light in which the art was then regarded. Those days were not as ours in the matter of educating musicians by wholesale and with despatch, nor did pupils then consider themselves equipped for their career as soon as a few elementary rules had been mastered. Which will prove the better days, by reason of having a "more excellent way," we know full well, and the time may yet come when musical education will return to the hard plodding, the long-continued and thankless toil that gave us the great masters.

Bartolomeo Cherubini, at the end of the three years, placed his son under Bartolomeo Felici for the study of counterpoint and composition. This must have been about 1770, when, according to Fétis, Felici opened a musical academy in Florence, assisted by his son, Alessandro. Both professors were men of ability and distinction. Picchianti styles Alessandro a "remarkable artist," but enters more into detail concerning his father. Of him we read: "Bartolomeo Felici, a man deeply versed in the musical science of his day, was a profound and skilful contrapuntist. The compositions in the alla capella style of his which have been handed down to us are models of purity, clearness and ingenious artifice—qualities causing them to be heard with pleasure whenever they are now sung in our churches. For teaching the difficult art of composition he was reputed the best professor in Florence and all Tuscany, and his school was attended by a large number of pupils, whose productions subsequently sustained his credit and glory." In the hands of such a man young Cherubini was safe, although there is reason to believe that Felici taught according to the cumbersome, embarrassing and unscientific method then prevalent in Italian schools. We read in Picchianti: "Despite the impetus given in the opening years of the century to the new theory of music by the celebrated Rameau, and subsequently by various illustrious Italians, the theory still remained enveloped in the physical phenomena of sound, and continued to be based upon calculations and geometrical demonstrations referring only to the mathematical determination of the number of vibrations—that is, of the volume or other elements of the sonorous body—whence it resulted that such and such intervals were admissible in musical compositions. . . . Theory being in this state, and absolutely unable to offer clear and sufficiently developed rules for the study of harmony and modulation, blind practice was substituted for it. The consequence of all this was that the art of counterpoint was encumbered with a host of observations and rules, each of which, invariably deduced from particular cases and not from general principles, gave rise to a host of exceptions. To succeed in mastering all the rules and the aggregate of all the exceptions, the student was obliged to go through a long and fatiguing process; he had to compose examples of counterpoint, first simple and then with certain artifices, both above and below a melody in plain song, the master making him write a single part and then combine in various manners six, seven, and eight real parts, with all scholastic and pedantic rigour." Unscientific as this system may have been, we know that marvels of contrapuntal skill came out of it. It severely tried patience and perseverance, and possibly disgusted with music many who, travelling along a less thorny road, would have gone on to the end. Those who endured the test were of the right stuff. They certainly knew how to use the technical resources of their art, and there was reason to believe that something more than a capacity for plodding had carried them through.

Cherubini remained with Felici four years, but began composing before he quitted that master's school. Boy-like, he aimed at a high mark, and produced a Mass for chorus and orchestra. Of this work nothing is known, save that it was performed (1773) in one of the Florentine churches. Other pieces followed in quick succession, as the master himself has told us: "Cherubini composed successively, from 1773 to 1778, seventeen pieces, comprising masses, interludes, psalms, oratorios and separate airs, all performed with equal success in the churches and amateur theatres of his native town." The autograph catalogue gives us some particulars concerning these boyish works. They included two masses, besides the one already mentioned, both in C major, a Cantata, "La Publicca Felicità," in honour of the Grand Duke, a "Magnificat," two "Lamentations of Jeremiah," a "Miserere," a comic air, and a "Te Deum." The fact that all the lad's compositions of this period were heard publicly shows that they were held in esteem. Yet it does not appear that a special genius shone through them as it did through those of Mozart and Mendelssohn. To this Halévy speaks in his "Études Sur la Vie et les Travaux de Cherubini." As the master's favourite pupil and friend, Halévy was permitted to examine the musical papers which Cherubini, who jealously guarded them from prying eyes, left behind him. He says: "I saw, on going through them, that it was, as it were, out of respect for himself, and from a desire to spare these early works, that he had kept them from all eyes. Everything in them announced the intelligent child brought up in a good school, and nurtured on good precepts; but nothing indicated the genius which was destined to be revealed at a later period. The Cherubini who had become illustrious was anxious about his reputation as a child, and fearful of injuring the glory of the Cherubini of thirteen. It was a sort of not unbecoming and pardonable coquetry." Let no one suppose that Cherubini from the time of leaving Felici gave himself up entirely to composition. He had worked hard—even to drudgery, we may well believe—for seven years, but his studies, so thorough and comprehensive, were only half completed. Therefore he put himself under Pietro Bizzari for singing, and Giuseppe Castrucci for the organ and piano, remaining with them till he had attained his seventeenth year. By that time Cherubini was, in some sort, a notability in Florence. The citizens, jealous for the artistic repute of their famous town, accounted him a prodigy, and cherished the highest hopes of his future. All this, of course, delighted the family in the Via Fiesolana, but it failed to remove the difficulty that confronted them, and found expression in the query "What is next to be done with our Luigi Carlo Zanobia Salvatore Maria?" The youth was pluming his wings for flight. He longed to see men and cities, to enlarge the field of his observation, and vary the nature of his experience. In these respects his father, now the happy parent of a dozen children, could not help him. The swarm of young mouths open for daily bread consumed all the poor professor's earnings, and it seemed for the moment that Number Ten's career would be checked for want of a little money. Happily, the Grand Ducal Throne was then occupied by a prince in whom survived the spirit of Lorenzo the Magnificent, Leopold, afterwards the Austrian Emperor of that name, knew his duty to such a city as Florence, and lost no opportunity of promoting its material prosperity or artistic renown. When, therefore, it came to his ears that a lad in the Via Fiesolana had the spirit of music upon him, he took a real interest in the case. Leopold did not stop at a smile and a compliment—very flattering royal gifts, no doubt, but often barren. He put his hand in his pocket—took up the quality of father at the point where Bartolomeo's slender purse obliged him to stop—and made young Cherubini an allowance sufficient to pay the cost of study under the famous Sarti, then resident at Bologna. The opening of the year 1778, the youth being then nearly eighteen, witnessed this real and royal start in life.

Sarti's influence upon Cherubini was destined in the nature of things to be great, since the young Florentine entered his school with all the ardent worship that youth gives to its ideal. It need hardly be said that reverence and devotion were not wasted upon such a man. Sarti was a musician to whom all the world accorded high rank. "His compositions," says Miel, one of Cherubini's biographers, "were characterised as divine; every town in Italy wanted him to write something for it, and he was unable to satisfy the demands made on him from all quarters." Outside his native land, he secured the admiration of connoisseurs such as Joseph Haydn, "Sarti being one of the masters," writes Frammery, "whom he esteemed most highly, no doubt because the Italian's energetic and noble style possessed a greater analogy than that of any other composer to his own." At the time when Cherubini went to him he was fifty years of age, and in the zenith of his powers. The lad soon found himself in an atmosphere very different from that he had quitted. It was not so much that Sarti made him study Palestrina, and write anthems in the style of that great master. Cherubini might have expected this, knowing Sarti's preference for Palestrina. What he did not anticipate, perhaps, was passing from unmixed scholasticism to something of the ideal and romantic. Certain authorities tell us that the Bolognese teacher directed his pupils to "imitate him in composing at night in a large unfurnished room, with a lamp suspended from the ceiling, that shed only a glimmering light." Such an attempt to excite the imagination by the influence of outward conditions is common enough in our day, but must have been surprising at the height of the "powder and pigtail" era. Sarti is said also to have made his pupils copy the scores of the masters in great quantities. But he did a more practical thing in the case of Cherubini. Sarti, as we have seen, was a very busy man, and had more work on his hands than one pair could get through. Consequently, knowing the quality of the young Florentine, he intrusted him with the padding of his numerous operas. The step was safe, as well as convenient, because an Italian public at that time had no ears for the minor characters in a lyric drama. They listened to a few leading airs and concerted pieces; as the rest went on they talked. None the less were Cherubini's labours a valuable exercise and an important experience; obtained, moreover, without personal responsibility or risk, since, had his music been bad, and anybody paid attention to it, censure would have fallen upon Sarti, as the supposed author.

In 1779 a vacancy occurred in the musical staff of Milan Cathedral through the death of the chapel-master, Signor Fioroni, and Sarti having been chosen to fill it, removed from Bologna to the northern city, taking Cherubini with him. By that time the master had conceived a strong affection for the pupil, who himself tells us in the autograph note already mentioned that Sarti gave him excellent advice, and made him his travelling companion on artistic journeys. Naturally, therefore, an opportunity was soon found for the young man to produce an opera on his own account. This he did a year after the removal to Milan, when a work in three acts, "Il Quinto Fabio," was brought out at Alexandria. Nothing is known of the opera now, but a tradition exists that it had no particular success, and we know that the composer did not preserve the score. From the date of "Il Quinto Fabio" till September, 1781, Cherubini was several times away from Milan, engaged in the task of directing other operas. Thus, in 1781, he went to Venice, where rehearsal, owing to the bankruptcy of the manager, did not ripen into performance. In January, 1782, he produced "Armida" (three acts) at the Pergola, Florence; "Adriano in Sirio" (three acts) followed at Leghorn in May; and four months later he was again at Florence with another three-act work, entitled "Messenzio." Besides these things, he wrote during the same period a Motett for the singer Marchesi; a second Motett for two choirs and two organs; "Nemo gaudeat"; and a number of smaller pieces; to which we allude only for the purpose of showing his remarkable assiduity. It may be added that two of the pieces in question were duets, with accompaniments for two corno d'amour—a now obsolete instrument, of which the English nobleman (Lord Cowper) who ordered the works was an amateur.

Another biographer (Arnold), quoted by Mr. Bellasis, declares that Cherubini's operatic music proved too learned for the taste of his countrymen: "People were afraid of him, for the evidence of originality displayed in his compositions might do considerable harm to their beloved cantilenas and fioriture." But this did not interfere with his progress, though it might have encouraged him to believe that he had done his work in the schools, and needed the experience of active life beyond their narrow limits. He left Sarti in the autumn of 1782, and began his career in earnest.

During the following year, our young master brought out two operas—one, "Il Quinto Fabio" (No. 2, at the Teatro Argentina, Rome); the other, "La Sposa di Tre," at the San Samuele, Venice. The last was a two-act opera buffa, and both are now extinct. Both, however, served the purpose of making their young composer better known and liked. After hearing the comic work, the Venetians called him "Il Cherubino," because of the sweetness of his melodies, according to some, but, if we may credit M. Felix Clément, on account of his handsome face and figure. As M. Clément is generally wrong on disputed points, we prefer to believe that Cherubini's themes and not his bodily graces caused the pretty play upon his name. On leaving Venice, where he had made so favourable an impression "Il Cherubino" proceeded to Florence and saw his native city for the last time; remaining there long enough to direct the performance of a pasticcio oratorio at the Jesuits' Church, the music being all taken and adapted from his own operas save, perhaps, one number expressly written. Cherubini also produced at Florence during this visit an opera entitled "L'Idalide," shortly following that work up with "L'Alessandro nell'Indie" at Mantua. By this time, although Cherubini was only in his twenty-fourth year, his name was known far and wide, even in the distant island whence came his early patron, Lord Cowper. There he was admired to some practical purpose; since, soon after the Mantuan engagement, he received an offer to go to London for the purpose of writing two Italian operas and producing them at the King's Theatre in 1785-6. Picchianti tells us that the directorship of a Philharmonic Society then existing in London was included in this transaction, but M. Pougin questions the statement on what appear to be good grounds. In the first place, Cherubini makes no mention of the matter in his autobiographical note; in the second place, the catalogue contains no mention of works written for the Society named. On the other hand, M. Pougin believes, with Choron and Fazzelle, that the young master received here the title and duties of Composer to the King, and wrote several detached pieces in discharge of his functions.

Cherubini left Florence for England in September, 1784, two months after the Handel Commemoration in Westminster Abbey, and thus not only severed his connection with Italy, but entered upon a course which led to his complete departure from the accepted Italian style.

STUDENTS' MUSIC.

BY HENRY C. LUNN.

WE remember once to have heard it remarked by a very clever musical amateur that his spare time had been so much occupied in playing as to prevent the possibility of his studying. So frank an admission of an undoubted fact is indeed rare; but those who are sufficiently trained to separate educated artists from showy executants must be fully aware that the success of the last-named class arises in a great measure from being able to disguise this truth from their listeners. In justification, however, of such a method of procuring admiration from an inartistic audience, it must be recollected that until recently music was rarely taught upon a thoroughly recognised system, and possessors of agile fingers and fine voices, therefore, were often accepted, both in public and private, as sound pianists and accomplished singers, although they possessed but a slender knowledge of the principles of the art which they professed; indeed, we have known many persons in past times make large incomes by teaching music who scarcely knew one time from another, and could not define the difference between a concord and a discord. Happily these days can be looked back to with a placid belief that we now regard musical talent as merely valuable material to be cultivated by those who have made the art of such cultivation a life-study; but there is still much to do, for although there may often be the will to teach correctly, many do not recognise the fact that to command success compositions must be selected which will ensure firmness, quality, and power of tone, either with the voice or touch, before executive facility can be legitimately displayed. Students' music, indeed, should be chosen with as much discretion, and taught with as much care, by a master as drugs are selected and administered by a doctor; for it should be remembered that the pupil, like the patient, places implicit confidence in the professor he employs, and must abide by the result, whether for good or evil. Thibaut, in his excellent work on "Purity in Musical Art," says: "It has perhaps never been so generally acknowledged as at the present time that the groundwork of all true knowledge must necessarily lie in the historical study and acquisition of standard works that have come down to us. It is only by thus profiting by the lessons of others that fresh energy can safely be applied towards the advancement of truth." And yet, although this essay was published more than half a century ago, he continues thus: "It is in music alone that an arrogance that disdains all history is the order of the day, although the greatest masters of the period preceding our own showed us a better example." If this is true of the composers of that time, it must have been equally true of the students, who undoubtedly reflect the age in which they live; and in these days, when so much is written and spoken about the music of the past, the present and the future, it behoves us to see not only that we are guiltless of that "arrogance which disdains all history" by ignoring the teachings of the past, but, in over anxiety to show our love of progress, that we do not urge a student to attempt what should be held up to him as the music of the future.

When we use the term "student," we mean a person who intends, whether as an amateur or a professor, to become a master of the art, and not one who is content to play or sing a few compositions to please his friends. In order, then, to lay a solid foundation for one who desires to make himself a pianist, we contend that, apart from those technical exercises which are essential for the training of the fingers, music should be given especially adapted for the training of the mind, so that the history of the instrument may be practically exemplified. We do not expect a pupil in drawing to copy a figure, a tree, or, still worse, a landscape, until he has been taught by minor studies in form to approach these subjects by gradual stages; and yet do we see a young pianoforte student attempting Beethoven's Sonatas and Mendelssohn's "Songs without words" without having ever touched a single composition of those great men who preceded these writers, and whom the writers themselves held in the highest esteem. It is true that when the pianoforte grew from a luxury to a necessity in our houses there were composers ready enough to supply the market with light pieces especially written to make a show, whilst covering the defects of idle pupils; and that when the rage for "classical music" partially supplanted these works, amateurs, rather than be out of the fashion, attempted to unravel the artistic mysteries of a Sonata, with mind and fingers formed for brilliant Fantasias. This was, of course, beginning at the end, and satisfied nine-tenths of the listeners; but "students" must be trained on students' music; and, as sound progress means development, it can scarcely be said that life is long enough even to commence "finishing lessons."

In the study of the vocal art it is of the utmost importance that songs should not be attempted before the voice has been duly trained. When we hear a pupil who has received lessons but six months struggling through the difficulties of "Softly sighs," it may be confidently predicted that her case is hopeless in the future, for the office of the singing-master is to build up a sound structure, and not to patch up an unsound one. Here again it is necessary to go back to the long established solfeggi, by means of which so many good voices have been formed, and to such songs as Mozart, Handel, and Haydn have bequeathed us when solos can be safely given. With singers, however, who intend to appear on the stage or in the concert-room—as distinct from instrumentalists—it is an unfortunate necessity that a portion of the training must be before the public, for to throw out the voice so as to be sufficiently heard in a large building filled with people is an art which cannot be studied in private.

For student-composers, too, the music chosen as models for examination should be at first only that in which the rules of form have been steadily preserved, since the freedom which is gradually obtained after a course of strict discipline is always more healthy than that which springs from a defiance of restraint. It should also be remembered that exercises are not compositions, as much harm arises where such youthful effusions are favourably criticised, not only because the mere tyro is apt to consider himself a second Mozart, but because, should he ever attain to eminence, these works are raked up and placed before the public as "interesting" specimens of his unripe genius.

Let it then be borne in mind that to a much greater extent than is generally imagined the future of a pupil rests with the master. Much of the crude playing, singing, and composition of the day arises from the fact of works being selected for exhibition instead of study; and although the weakness of both the teacher and the learner is thus displayed, there are few who have the courage to resist such temptation. For an earnest and zealous pupil it is undoubtedly essential that a good and conscientious master should be selected; but little real progress can be made unless this master possess a clear perception of what is truly "Students' Music."

THE advertisement for an organist who could teach dancing, to which we drew attention some time since, proves beyond doubt that there must be some sort of affinity between the poetry of sound and the poetry of motion, although we can scarcely perhaps imagine that one engaged in the musical service of the church would be employed by the members of the congregation to give instruction in the steps and figures of fashionable dances. The union of two accomplishments offering a much more violent contrast, however, is now seriously proposed; for it is asserted that ladies engaged in musical tuition may greatly add to their income by teaching the art of cutting out dresses. This extraordinary announcement appears in the advertisement columns of a morning contemporary, and is thus worded: "Lady music teachers can easily earn from £3 to £5 per week by learning the scientific system of dress-cutting, and giving instructions upon the same to ladies at private houses in connection with their music instructions." As a further inducement, it is said that gratuitous lessons will be given to those who desire thus to advertise the "Scientific Dress-cutting Association," and that in a very short time the whole art of dress-cutting from measure will be acquired, "enabling any one to thoroughly understand the system, so as to cut by it any garment worn by lady or child, to fit perfectly without alteration." The only thing that seems wanting in this project is the formation of classes for music as well as dress-cutting at the establishment from which this idea emanates, so that those who intend to become professors of these combined arts shall be taught how to lead gradually from one to the other without severing too violently the chain of thought called up in the mind of the pupil. From the works of the great composers to the works of the great dressmakers seems indeed a wide step; but it can perhaps be shown that there is as much plan in a first-rate dress as in a first-rate Sonata, and thus an appreciation of symmetrical form may be inculcated. No doubt some persons will object to the engagement of one person to teach two subjects; but the remedy is in their hands, for in advertising for a professor of music, it will be only necessary to add that "No scientific dress-cutter need apply."

THERE can be no reason for estimating the value of an artist's work at a higher standard after his death than during his lifetime; yet it is a fact that not only in many German towns where the operas of Wagner were never heard, they have been often performed since his decease, but in Paris—a city notoriously adverse to the recognition of his claim, either before or after the success he achieved in other musical centres—concerts have recently been given in which the programmes were selected almost exclusively from his compositions. Whatever may be the cause of the increased appreciation of the creations of this representative artist, however, we are glad to find that he has succeeded in establishing so universally his claim to a hearing; for, apart from the intrinsic value of his operas, it is a healthy sign of the times when composers, instead of vocalists, engage the attention of the music-loving public. In proof of the growth of this feeling, we may mention that whilst at Munich a "Wagner Cylcus" was in progress—all the composer's operas, except "Parsifal," being performed in chronological order—at Vienna a "Mozart Cylcus" was given, commencing with "Idomeneo," and ending with "La Clemenza di Tito." It is stated, too, that M. Gounod is editing "Don Giovanni," according to Mozart's original MS. score, and that the work is to be produced in Paris next winter. The revolution which has effected the deposition of the prima donna from the operatic throne, and the reign of the composer in her place, has been no doubt mainly owing to the growing belief in the truth of Wagner's theories; and if this should lead to the performance of a "Cylcus" of the works of those composers who are worthy of such distinction, we could name many whose glory was eclipsed during the long despotic rule of the petted vocalist.

AMONGST the many attempts to aid the public in the appreciation of high-class music, annotated programmes have for some years been provided at the best concerts, in lieu of the bald list of works to be performed which were the only available guides in past times. This is a good step in advance, and deserves every encouragement. It could scarcely, however, be expected that an analysis of this kind should be supplied only to those who listen to musical compositions; and still more recently, therefore, many important works have been published for executants, in which not only the fingering, the phrasing and the plan of the several movements are carefully explained, but the manner of performing all the graces and embellishments are printed, so it may be said that with each copy of a piece a lesson is given on the mode of playing it. When Sterndale Bennett was asked why he did not finger the works he edited, his reply was that if he did so it would appear as if he were boldly forcing his own method upon every other master. It may probably be said that many pupils, as well as many teachers, would have been too glad if he could have sufficiently overcome these scruples to hand down his system of fingering to future generations; but there was no doubt much truth in his observation, for only lately we have heard it said that modern editions of the compositions of the great writers, with all the directions to which we have alluded, can be studied without a teacher; and it is only decisively to combat this assertion that we have been induced to make these remarks. Books, we know, are constantly published on medical subjects in which infallible rules are given for curing ourselves of every ailment; and persons in good health hold these in high esteem; but when they have anything the matter with them, sensible people go to a doctor. So should it be with music. All who are content to sport on the surface should study with interest the observations of accredited artists who edit the works of the standard composers; but those who would desire to interpret these works as their composer intended must at once engage a master.

THE arrangements for the Triennial Handel Festival at the Crystal Palace next month are now completed; and as this will be the first occasion on which the whole of the organisation of the vast musical portion of the undertaking has devolved upon the authorities of the Crystal Palace, it is satisfactory to find by the published prospectus that they will be in every respect equal to those which have already earned for these commemorations so high a reputation through-

Opera; but, apart from this, we have decisive proof that he is perfectly able to grapple with those purely dramatic situations where noise too often takes the place of music, and sensational effects are sought for at the expense of artistic development. In two or three places, some of which we have already indicated, the workmanship is so elaborate as to appeal more to the study than the stage for due recognition; but the earnest endeavour to maintain the dignity of his art proves that he is a worthy missionary in the cause; and where, therefore, he does not elicit enthusiastic admiration, he at least commands profound respect.

Of the execution of the Opera we cannot speak in too high terms of praise. Madame Valleria has unquestionably made the part of the heroine, Colomba, quite her own, both her singing and acting showing how deeply she had studied every phase of the character. Her rendering of the "Vocero," culminating in the wild cry for vengeance, was a perfect realisation of the composer's intention; and both in the impassioned portions and the death scene she was equally fine. Mlle. Baldi (a new-comer), was excellent in the part of Lydia, and created a marked effect in the duet occupying so large a portion of the fourth act, her singing throughout the opera indeed being thoroughly satisfactory. Miss Clara Perry was charming in the part of Chilina, her purity of vocalisation in the characteristic "Vocero" and the Corsican ballad, especially, showing that she had been trained in a good school, and had profited to the utmost by her training. Mr. Barton McGuckin sang extremely well in the character of Orso, eliciting much applause for the melodious solo "Here often have I sat" and the Corsican Love-Song, and acted with an ease which shows that he is giving as earnest an attention to the histrionic to the vocal art. Mr. Novara was appropriately impressive in the music of the brigand Savelli, and Mr. Tenney Pope as the Count de Nevers and Mr. Ludwig in the somewhat thankless part of Giuseppe Barracini were highly efficient; the minor characters of Antonio and the Sergeant of Marines being effectively supported by Mr. Wilfred Esmond and Mr. B. Davies respectively. The choruses were not only well sung, but well acted throughout; and the scenery and dresses were everything that could be desired. The Opera was conducted by the composer, who presided over a well-balanced orchestra; the accompaniments, if in parts somewhat overpowering the voices, being generally so well played as to show much careful preparation.

It might be imagined that the first representation of this work would be attended by a large assemblage of artists and amateurs interested in the future of English opera; but, in proof of the hold it has taken of the general public, it should be mentioned that since the production of the Opera the audiences have steadily increased in numbers, the last evening performance (Friday) attracting by far the fullest house of the season, many persons, indeed, being unable to gain admission. Mr. Mackenzie, who conducted his work on each occasion, wisely declined many encores which were obviously desired by the majority; but on Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, the redemand for Chilina's "Old Corsican Ballad" in the third act was so general and decisive that it had to be repeated. It should also be stated that after every performance the composer was repeatedly called for and greeted most warmly by an enthusiastic audience.

Mr. Carl Rosa's short season terminated on Saturday, the 21st ult. The excellent performance of Madame Marie Roze as Leonora, in Beethoven's "Fidelio," and as Marguerite in Gounod's "Faust," must be recorded amongst the events of the season, and we must also mention the first appearance of Miss Amy Sherwin as the heroine in "Maritana," the débütante evidencing the possession of an agreeable light soprano voice, and eliciting a fair amount of applause in the favourite pieces in the Opera. On the last night of the season Ambroise Thomas's "Mignon" was performed, with Madame Marie Roze in the principal part, a highly successful débüt being made by Miss Clara Leighton as Filina, the new-comer displaying not only an excellent voice, but much talent for acting, both of which qualifications will no doubt ripen by experience. Mr. Carl Rosa, who conducted on the occasion for the first time during the season, received from a crowded audience—including the Prince and Princess of Wales—an ovation which, considering the excellent faith he has kept with the public during the brief time allowed him, was in every respect most thoroughly deserved. Indeed, we cannot dismiss our notice of so important a season without paying a high tribute to the energy, perseverance and liberality of a lessee who has for years steadily kept before him the object he had at heart—that of founding a National Opera—and, despite many early discouragements, steadily worked to its accomplishment. To produce two works of such magnitude as "Esmeralda" and "Colomba" during a season extending over only four weeks was in itself a task of no ordinary difficulty; but to place them upon the stage in so perfect a manner, both musically and dramatically, as he has done, was a feat which he has a right to feel proud of, and for which he has nobly earned the thanks of all who believe that English lyrical composers require but the fostering care of so earnest a champion in the cause to enable them successfully to compete with the recognised composers of foreign countries.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE last Concert in March introduced a quasi-novelty in the shape of a Violin Concerto by the late Henri Wieniawski, dedicated to and played in splendid style by Senor Sarasate. A piece written by one virtuoso for another is not generally of great musical value, and Wieniawski's D minor Concerto is no exception to the rule. There is, however, a charming slow movement in which the "singing" quality of Senor Sarasate's violin was heard to great advantage. That the Concerto is full of brilliant passages, well adapted to the instrument, amounts almost to a truism under the circumstances. An admirable performance of Schumann's Symphony in C is all that remains to be recorded of an enjoyable though not very interesting Concert.

Mr. Hubert Parry's Symphony in G, performed for the first time at the last Birmingham Festival, was the chief feature of the next Concert (the 7th ult.). Its sound musical scholarship and earnestness of thought can never fail to impress the musician, and, apart from this, the work is by no means devoid of melodic beauty and genuine invention. A full analysis of the Symphony has already been published in THE MUSICAL TIMES, and we have only to add that the performance left nothing to be desired. The public were not very demonstrative; still the applause went on increasing after each movement, and did not cease after the last until Mr. Parry had appeared on the platform to bow his acknowledgments. Mr. Richard Rickard on the same occasion played Chopin's Pianoforte Concerto in F minor in a very creditable manner, although he has still to prove that he is amongst born Chopin players; for the genuine interpretation of the Polish master is a matter of temperament rather than of training.

Of the Concert given on the 14th ult., it will be sufficient to record that in a fine performance of Berlioz' Symphony, "Harold en Italie," Mr. Krause played the viola part in a highly efficient manner.

The last Concert which falls under our present notice was full of interest in more than one respect. The Symphony was Brahms's No. 2 in D, a work which must rank amongst the highest symphonic achievements of our day, although its claims to a place by the side of Beethoven's masterpieces will appear doubtful to all but the "inner circle" of Brahms's worshippers. Its performance was excellent. Senor Sarasate at the same concert played Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G, which is perhaps the most successful of Bruch's numerous compositions, being as effective for the instrument on the one hand as it is full of musical interest on the other. Considering the dearth of good compositions for the violin this Concerto is worthy of more attention than it receives from most violinists. Mr. Mackenzie's Scotch Rhapsody No. 2, heard for the first time at the Crystal Palace, was very favourably received, although placed, where no novelty should be placed, at the end of a long and fatiguing performance. Like its predecessor it is based upon Scottish melodies and exhibits the hand of the practised and gifted musician apart from the additional charms of coulour locale. Mr. Egbert Roberts, an accomplished and deep-voiced baritone, sang a scena from Rubinstein's "Paradise Lost" on the same occasion.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Two events of particular interest distinguished the Concert given by this Society in St. James's Hall on the 25th ult., and for the sake of these we may dismiss with mere mention that which, in the programme, calls for less note. Suffice it, therefore, simply to state that the Overture played was Schumann's "Hermann and Dorothea," the Symphony Beethoven's No. 7, the Concerto Beethoven's No. 5 (pianist, Madame Sophie Menter), and the final piece Liszt's Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 4.

Of the two works requiring attention, one bore the name of a veteran composer, Sir Julius Benedict; the other that of a young man, Mr. Oliver King, who only a few years ago was a chorister-boy at St. Andrew's, Wells Street. They sampled, consequently, the talent of the generation past and the generation coming, and though thus separated by a gulf of years, presented more than one quality in common to show the continuity of genuine art. The work written by Sir Julius—for the artist, Madame Patey, who took the leading part in its interpretation—is a vocal scena, with words adapted by Miss Louisa Courtenay from Mary Stuart's soliloquy in Schiller's drama. We need not enlarge upon the poetic nature of the subject, since all must have read the pathetic lines in which the imprisoned Queen invokes her beloved France, and dreams of the liberty she is never more to know. Sir Julius has treated his theme with musicianly skill and no small measure of sympathetic feeling; though we have to complain that he is sometimes vague and wanting in power. Opening with a recitative, in accordance with the usual form, the scena goes on to a cantabile, expressive of adieu to France. This is followed by a short Intermezzo, wherein the Queen indulges thoughts of liberty, and afterwards comes the equivalent of a cabaletta, in which she sends to France, by passing clouds, the greeting of a hopeless captive. It need not be said that in each movement the hand of an accomplished musician appears, or that the vocal part was rendered with intelligence and feeling by Madame Patey. Yet the scena made no great effect, for the reasons, perhaps, upon which we have already touched. Though Sir Julius himself conducted, the orchestral music was played in slovenly fashion.

Mr. Oliver King's work appeared in the form of an Overture, and a prize overture to boot. It will be remembered that the Philharmonic Society offered, some time ago, a reward of ten pounds for the best composition of this kind, the task of deciding being undertaken by Sir M. Costa and Sir Julius Benedict. We now learn that forty-six overtures were sent in and examined by the judges—Mr. Otto Goldschmidt acting for Sir Michael—who gave the small prize but great honour to a work signed "Rex." In due course it was found that "Rex" hailed from Ottawa, Canada, and that he was the former chorister of St. Andrew's, but now pianist to the royal spouse of the Governor-General of the Dominion. That Mr. King's success surprised amateurs acquainted with his previous efforts cannot be said. The young composer's music had theretofore, it is true, been marked by a good deal of natural exuberance and by the complications in which youth, conscious of power and instinct with vitality, is apt to express itself. These features, however, revealed rather than obscured evidence of uncommon ability animated by serious and lofty purpose, and it seems to us quite natural that he should have borne off the Philharmonic palm. Mr. King's overture—we speak after one hearing and without seeing the score—invites some remarks upon its main structure, chiefly because the whole of the first part is repeated, like the first part of a symphonic Allegro, and the "working out" is necessarily brief in consequence. We do not at all object to the repetition, per se, because the themes are so good, and their orchestral treatment so attractive, that we can hear them again with pleasure, and still have zest for their recapitulation in the second part. At the same time, Mr. King interests us greatly in the "working out," as far as it goes, and excites a wish that it had been allowed to go further. The young man is evidently not one of the imperfectly educated composers who nowadays shrink from scholastic work, and call it hard names to make a merit of their avoidance. He is far better than they, and the conviction of this fact provokes the criticism just advanced. For the rest we have nothing but praise; and especially do we congratulate Mr. King upon his close observance of classic form, and the clearness with which his themes are treated. The logical development of the work is never in doubt. At every step the listener knows exactly the stage of the "argument," just as he knows precisely what the composer is saying. These are great and rare merits in the work of a young man, and they encourage a belief that Mr. King has made a wise choice of method and style. We should add that the overture, heralded by a very brief Adagio which suggests the leading theme of the Allegro, ends with an animated Coda wherein the same materials are presented under different conditions, and is thus symmetrically rounded off. It was heard with marked approval, an idea being general that the Philharmonic Society had met with ample return for its money. Mr. W. G. Cusins conducted the performance.

A specially interesting feature of the next Concert, which takes place on the 9th inst., will be a new work composed expressly for the Society by Mr. Mackenzie. The composition is a Ballad for Orchestra founded on Keats's poem, "La Belle Dame sans Merci."

HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.

THE Concert given by this choir in St. James's Hall, on the 14th ult., was very largely attended, thanks, mainly, to the appearance of Senor Sarasate and M. de Pachmann. These artists played several favourite selections in the masterly style which we need not here particularise, and were rewarded with overwhelming applause. The more important doings, however, were those of the choir, conducted by Signor Randegger. This body of voices is not yet all it should be, nor all it will be after a time, but the execution of several difficult works called for hearty approval. We may instance Mendelssohn's Psalm, "Judge me, O God," Macfarren's "Orpheus with his lute," Lucas's "Unfading joys" and Pinsuti's "My lady comes," as affording opportunities which the Choir turned to good account by excellent art. A new part-song, "Winter Days," from the pen of Mr. Caldicott, was another executive success, and one for its composer also. This piece has been chosen to enter into the programme of the great choral competition at Cardiff Eisteddfod next August, and deserves the honour. It is a capital mixture of musicianly skill and the elements of popular effect. The vocal soloists on the occasion were the Misses Robertson and their brother, Mr. J. Robertson. These artists, having cultivated an almost perfect ensemble, were heard to great advantage in a new trio, "Hope," by Mr. J. C. Ward, and in Henry Leslie's "Love."

SEÑOR SARASATE'S CONCERTS.

THE overflowing audiences which have assembled on all occasions when Senor Sarasate was announced to play doubtless emboldened the Spanish violinist to give some Concerts on his own account. The first of these took place at St. James's Hall on the 9th ult., and the attendance was very large; but as "Colomba" was produced at Drury Lane Theatre on the same evening, we can only take formal note of the event. Senor Sarasate showed laudable ambition in engaging the Philharmonic Orchestra, as it enabled him to display his powers in that greatest test of a violinist's executive capacity, Beethoven's Concerto. Mr. Cusins's forces were heard in Schubert's unfinished Symphony, two movements of the "Midsummer Night's Dream" music, and the Overture to "Euryanthe."

A similar Concert was given on Thursday, the 12th ult., when Senor Sarasate repeated his remarkable performance of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, which he had already given at a Philharmonic Concert, and at the Crystal Palace this season. It is difficult to comprehend the feelings of an executant who, after delighting his hearers with a masterly rendering of a masterpiece could so lower the dignity of his art as did the Spanish virtuoso in his so-called "Faust" Fantasia. It must also be noted with regret that the audience applauded the legitimate and the vulgar displays with complete indiscriminate. Senor Sarasate's last item in the programme was a clever though rhapsodical piece on Bohemian airs from his own pen. The orchestral portion of the Concert included Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, the Overture to "Oberon," and the two ballet airs from Rubinstein's Opera "Der Dämon," in which the composer has infused considerable Russian character into his music. Senor Sarasate announces a third and last Concert to take place on Friday afternoon, the 4th inst., at St. James's Hall.

MISS ZIMMERMANN'S CONCERTS.

THE first of these classical entertainments was given in the Royal Academy Concert Room on Thursday, the 19th ult., and was attended by a fair audience, considering that the announcements concerning the enterprise had not been extensively circulated. Even on this occasion the programme contained no reference to the future Concerts, which we believe are to be given on the 8th and 24th inst., and it is a fact that members of the audience were inquiring of one another whether the words "First Concert" implied that there were more to come. We draw attention to this because concerts of so high a character should not be in danger of failing for want of publicity. With the modesty that invariably characterises a true artist, Miss Zimmermann contented herself with one solo, Schumann's Fantasia in C, Op. 17, but in this she gave full evidence of her sterling qualities as a pianist. The work is as difficult as it is beautiful, but it was played with unflinching accuracy as well as with considerable feeling. The audience was in the highest degree appreciative, even asking for a repetition of the middle movement, though of course the request was not complied with. The concerted works in the programme were Mr. Villiers Stanford's Sonata in D, for pianoforte and violin, Op. 11, and Rubinstein's Quintet in G minor, Op. 99, in the execution of which the concert-giver was associated with Messrs. Straus, Ries, Zerbini and Pezze. In this instance native art more than held its own—Mr. Stanford's work being noteworthy for consummate musicianship and an easy flow of ideas, while that of Herr Rubinstein must be pronounced laboured and patchy, though containing one or two beautiful themes. Madame Sophie Löwe, whose appearances in the concert-room have been infrequent of late, sang six lieder by Schubert and Schumann with excellent taste and expression.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE exceptionally fine performance of "Elijah," by the Sacred Harmonic Society, on the 6th ult., at St. James's Hall, is likely to enhance the reputation of the new association. The choruses were rendered not only with power and precision, but with the intelligence due to careful training. Miss Anna Williams was obviously suffering from hoarseness, but Madame Patey and Mr. Edward Lloyd were admirable, and Mr. Santley surprised his hearers by the freshness of voice, amounting to rejuvenescence, which he displayed in the principal character. The experiment of allotting the part of the Youth to a boy would have been more successful had the juvenile vocalist been less affected by nervousness. Mr. Hallé deserves praise for his admirable direction of the work. Schubert's Mass in E flat and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," were announced for the Concert on the 27th ult.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MOST of our serial Concerts are now over for the season, and during the next few months the musical public will have to depend for their entertainment chiefly upon casual performances, which as a rule are not remarkable for excellence, either of subject-matter or execution. During the past month, however, there has been no lack of good music, as may be seen from the following notes.

Of the first event in chronological order, the production here on the 9th ult. of Mr. Sullivan's "Iolanthe," it is unnecessary to say much, because the merits and demerits of the work have been sufficiently canvassed beforehand in London and elsewhere. It may be remarked, however, that the performance was above the average of touring opera companies in completeness, if not in individual excellence, and that the piece met with a very favourable reception and attracted large audiences throughout the fortnight over which its run extended.

On the 12th an instrumental Chamber Concert of some interest was given by Miss Emily Walker, a local pianist of rising talent, assisted by a lady violinist, Miss Lucy Riley, and Mr. Rowland Winn (pianoforte). Among the chief features of the programme were Schubert's "Phantasiesstücke," a Sonata by Beethoven, the A flat and A minor Lieder (Nos. 19 and 21) of Mendelssohn, Thalberg's "Seminamide" Fantasia and Valse Capricieuses—all for pianoforte—and examples of Ries, De Bériot, and Beethoven, for the violin. The playing of both the ladies was distinguished by good feeling and irreproachable technique, among their most successful efforts being the air and variations from the Kreutzer Sonata and the "Pensées Fugitives" of Heller and Ernst.

The fourth and last of Mr. Stockley's Orchestral Concerts which took place on the 19th ult., was signalled by the first production here, under the composer's direction, of Mr. F. H. Cowen's "Scandinavian" Symphony (No. 3, in C minor), first given in St. James's Hall, on the 18th of December, 1880, and since performed with marked success in Austria, the United States and other foreign countries. Like the "Scotch" Symphony of Mendelssohn, this fine work embodies its author's impressions of Northern travel, only in place of the storm-lashed shores and misty mountain wilds of Caledonia, the music reflects the more placid spirit of the Norwegian fiords, whose stillness is broken only by the blithe song of an occasional boating party in summer, or the merry tinkling of the sledge bells in winter. Mr. Cowen, however, has not restricted himself to the delineation or suggestion merely of external effects, but has caught something of the heroic spirit of Northern legendary lore, thus raising his work as much above the level of ordinary programme music in scope, as it certainly is in form and structure. The performance of this very picturesque and original work on the occasion under notice was distinguished by a spirit and brilliancy which elicited not only the composer's cordial encomiums but the enthusiastic applause of the public. Another interesting novelty on this occasion was Mr. Cowen's new Suite for strings, entitled "In the Olden Time," which was first heard at the Crystal Palace a few weeks ago. The audience were evidently much impressed by the quaint old English character of the themes and their clever contrapuntal treatment, but the work as a whole did not excite so much enthusiasm as the Symphony, or appeal so strongly to popular sympathies as the fanciful and picturesque Ballet Suite of the same composer heard here at the Festival of last autumn. Of the other orchestral works performed at the same Concert the most noteworthy were the late Sterndale Bennett's Fantasia Overture "Paradise and the Peri," written in 1862 for the Jubilee of the London Philharmonic Society, and the Prelude to Mr. Sullivan's "Henry VIII.," written in 1877 for Mr. Calvert's revival of the play at Manchester. Mr. Rowland Winn played with good feeling and effect the pianoforte part in Sterndale Bennett's very Mendelssohnian Caprice in E major; and Madame Patey in Schubert's "Ave Maria" (transposed), Haydn's "She never told her love," and Benedict's "By the sad sea waves" was not less successful than Signor Foli in the "Creation" air "Now heaven in fullest glory shone," Mendelssohn's "I'm a roamer," and Pintsuti's "Bedouin's Love-Song."

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THIS month has been singularly devoid of musical interest, thanks to the action of the Colston Hall Company, who, by letting their building for long periods to proprietors of panoramas, temperance lecturers, and others, have effectually put a stop to the usual series of Monday

Popular Concerts. For several seasons Mr. Riseley gave his twelve Popular Concerts between October and April, but last year he was unable to obtain the hall after Christmas, and was obliged to give the second six Concerts during the summer term. Consequently the attendance was not good, and we cannot complain of the experiment not being repeated this year, although there is a widespread feeling of regret among that section of the community who do not care for panoramas and are not personally interested in the Blue Ribbon Army. Bristol cannot be said to give undue encouragement to English art in any form, but she certainly carries the palm among English cities for staunchly and steadfastly setting her face against her own native artists, and her musical citizens suffer accordingly. In point of fact, Bristol, musically, is divided into two parties; the one holds that nothing good can come out of Bristol, and that no artist is worth his salt unless he bears a foreign name; the other maintains that Bristol, fairly treated, could and would in the course of a few years rank at least as high as Birmingham or Manchester, both in regard to choir and orchestra. Unhappily this second party is in the minority, monetarily if not numerically, and as things stand at present there seems little hope of Bristol obtaining a fair chance of showing what she is really capable of in matters musical. The universal law of progress is not, it would appear, acknowledged by the powers that be in Bristol, but we have faith in "the survival of the fittest," and it is our firm conviction that, sooner or later, Bristol will, in spite of all opposition, take that place in the musical world which she would even now have been qualified to claim were not her house so "divided against itself."

The Festival Choir has been called together again after some months' rest, and is now preparing for a couple of Concerts, to be given in the autumn, and for which, we hear on good authority, Mr. Hallé's band either is, or will be, engaged. If this is the case, it is to be hoped that the committee will stipulate for rather more full rehearsal than at the Festival of last year, unless they wish to maintain the reputation for carelessness on these points so well earned and so liberally bestowed on that unfortunate occasion. The music at present in rehearsal is Handel's "Belshazzar" and Goetz's 137th Psalm. It is too early as yet to criticise the choir, and it is scarcely fair to compare its present condition with the high pitch of perfection it had arrived at, by dint of almost daily rehearsal, before the Festival; but the long holiday has certainly told upon it, and Mr. Rootham has plenty of work before him if he intends, as we hope, to bring it up to what it was last October, before the above-mentioned Concerts take place.

Miss Farler gave her Annual Concert at the Colston Hall, on the 5th ult., the first part of the programme consisting of Niels Gade's Cantata, "Psyche," given for the first time in Bristol, with a chorus of about 180 selected from the Festival Choir. Mr. Carrington led the small band and Mr. Rootham conducted. Madame Marie Roze sang the part of Psyche, and the other soloists were Miss Letti Wade, Miss Farler, Mr. Morgan and Mr. Oswald (in place of Mr. F. King, who was unable to sing through indisposition). The second part of the concert was miscellaneous.

An Organ Recital by Mr. Riseley, on the 21st ult., and the fifth Annual Concert for the Great Western Railway Servants' Benevolent Fund, on the 25th ult., were the only other events of any consequence. At the latter, Miss Thudichum sang a couple of ballads in excellent style, and the Cathedral quartet—Messrs. Jones, Morgan, Nash and Thomas—performed various part-songs with considerable execution and finish. Mr. Riseley was at the organ.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

DURING the past month Bradford may be said to have almost monopolised the attention of musical amateurs in this neighbourhood; elsewhere the season practically ended at Easter.

The postponed Concert of the Leeds Orchestral Society was given in the Church Institute, on the 9th ult., before a very poor audience. The performance of Sterndale

Bennett's "May Queen," which formed the first part of the programme, was in many respects unsatisfactory; the orchestra did not show signs of intimate acquaintance with the work, and the principals were somewhat unsteady, chiefly owing, no doubt, to the inefficiency of the instrumentalists. The chorus, which consisted of the members of the Armley Vocal Society, gave considerable satisfaction under the direction of Mr. W. H. Harrison. In the second part of the programme only one item calls for special mention—the pianoforte solo of Mr. J. Sidney Jones, junior, who played two of Chopin's Waltzes (Op. 64, No. 3, and Op. 42) with excellent taste. The Leeds Orchestral Society will do well to take to heart the lesson which this Concert must have taught, and abstain from appearing in public again without the necessary rehearsals.

The Manningham (Bradford) Vocal Union deserves every encouragement for the enterprise displayed in presenting a new work before its subscribers on the 10th ult. Heinrich Hofmann's "Cinderella" was performed on that occasion in the Bradford Church Institute with no little success, thanks to the energy of the Society's Conductor, Mr. J. H. Rooks. The chorus fully entered into the spirit of the work, and the band was as efficient as was to be expected. The soloists were Miss Norton, Madame Armitage, and Mr. Thornton Wood, all of whom won much applause at the hands of an appreciative audience. The Cantata formed the first part of the programme, the latter consisting of miscellaneous vocal selections.

Another enjoyable Concert was given at Bradford on the 13th ult., when the Festival Choral Society performed two important new works—Gade's "Psyche" and Mrs. Meadows White's "Ode to the Passions"—both for the first time in Bradford. A composition of so musically a character as Gade's new Cantata, and withal so melodious, could not fail to interest both executants and listeners; and not only was a masterly performance of the work given by the principals, band and chorus, but the audience was fascinated from the commencement. As at Birmingham, the favourite number proved to be the stirring chorus, "Thou art mighty, O Eros," which was most powerfully sung, and repeated in answer to vigorous applause. No less successful however in the execution was the graceful opening number, "In Hellas, a country of sunlight and gladness," which is replete with the most melodious passages. The arduous parts of Psyche and Eros were undertaken by Miss Agnes Larkcom and Mr. Bridson, both of whom acquitted themselves admirably; Mr. Bridson especially displayed untiring energy and remarkable refinement throughout the work, and has seldom sung better in our hearing. Miss Clara Jowett and Madame Armitage took the other solo parts; and Mr. R. S. Burton conducted an efficient band. We predict for Gade's "Psyche" a lasting popularity in Yorkshire, and expect to hear of more than one performance of the Cantata here next season. Mrs. Meadows White's "Ode to the Passions" is another work of great merit, and also deserving of frequent repetition: themes of the most different character are treated with the greatest skill, and the whole composition leaves a decidedly favourable impression upon the listener. Had the Bradford performance of this work been equal to that of "Psyche," the success of the composer would have been more generally recognised, but enough was done to show that the Cantata is one well worthy of the attention of any choral society. The most successful numbers were the soprano solo—"But Thou, O Hope"—beautifully sung by Miss Larkcom, the baritone air—"Revenge" and "Pity"—equally well interpreted by Mr. Bridson, and the choral numbers which open and conclude the work. The local soloists, Miss Jowett, Madame Armitage, and Mr. Mellor, have been heard to greater advantage, and the orchestra did not seem thoroughly acquainted with their work. Notwithstanding these deficiencies, however, the first performance of "The Ode to the Passions" in Yorkshire, gave general satisfaction. We hope soon to hear it repeated.

A third Concert of much excellence was given at Bradford on the 17th ult., when a new Society—The Bradford St. Cecilia Society—made its first public appearance. The reputation of the Conductor, Mr. Edward Hecht, was enough to attract a large audience, and accordingly we were not surprised to find the hall of the Technical School

MR. J. S. CURWEN'S attempt to naturalise the Welsh Eisteddfod in England met with fair success at Stratford on the 13th and 14th ult. There were 150 candidates, which included, with the choirs, 350 individuals. In some of the classes the entries were too numerous for the time of the public competition, and a preliminary examination was held in private a week previously, to reduce the numbers. The subjects were junior and senior pianoforte-playing, ditto sight-reading, solo-singing competitions for each of the four voices and for boys, quartet singing, composition, solo sight-singing, and choral singing by Societies. Messrs. Ridley Prentice, J. F. H. Read, and W. G. McNaught were the judges. The interest culminated in the choral contest, when the Town Hall was densely crowded. The competitions lasted two days. Much has been done during the winter by the prospect of these contests to stimulate musical study in the district. All competitors were bond fide residents and amateurs. The judges, in their award, expressed themselves surprised at the high attainments of the candidates.

AT St. Anne's, Hoxton, on Easter Day, there was a full Choral Celebration at eleven o'clock. The service was Field in D, with Himmels' "Incline Thine ear" as Introit, the bass solo being sung by Mr. E. Puttock, the Precentor, and the treble solos in the Communion Service by Master H. Clark. The sermon was preached by the Rev. T. Macdonogh. The Sanctus and the Pater Noster were especially well rendered. The voluntaries were, before the service, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and after, "Hallelujah" (Engedi). At seven o'clock there was a Festal Evensong, Tallis's Responses being used, the Psalms and Canticles being sung to Chants selected from the Cathedral Psalter. Prayers were intoned by Rev. T. Macdonogh, and the sermon was preached by Rev. W. M. Puttock, the vicar. The musical arrangements were under the direction of Mr. G. Dixon, the Organist and Choirmaster, who presided at the organ.

THE Belle Sauvage Glee Union's second Annual Concert was given at the Memorial Hall, Farrington Street, on the 11th ult., under the direction of Mr. C. H. Hewitt, L. Mus., T.C.L. There was a good attendance, and the Concert was highly successful. The glees and part-songs were excellently rendered and much applauded. The soloists were Miss Elise Worth, Madame L. Russell, Mr. W. Syckelmoore, Mr. Sydney Beckley and Mr. J. H. Müllerhausen. Miss E. M. Lawrence's new song, "My Scottish Lassie," sung by Mr. Beckley and accompanied by the composer, met with a favourable reception and had to be repeated. Master George Leipold's violin-playing was the feature of the evening, and he was enthusiastically encored in both his solos. Messrs. T. W. Leete, J. Williams and Frank Braine contributed a trio for violin, violoncello, and piano (Haydn), and Mr. G. F. Bruce, besides acting as accompanist, played a Scherzo for pianoforte by Kalliwoda.

A SIGHT rarely to be witnessed—namely a wedding in St. Paul's Cathedral—took place (the second only in the present century) on Wednesday in Easter week, the 28th of March on which occasion the marriage of the eldest daughter of the Very Rev. the Dean, with the Rev. Francis Paget was solemnised with full choral service. The occasion was the means of bringing forth an Anthem composed by Dr. Stainer, which will probably be found useful on similar occasions elsewhere. The words, with the exception of the opening recitative (from St. John ii. 1) were, we believe, written by the bridegroom himself, and are in the form of a two-verse eight-line hymn. The greater part of the Anthem consists of a melodious duet for treble and tenor, which duet may, the composer indicates, be used separately as an Anthem when a four-part chorus is not available: this, will doubtless increase the utility of the composition.

A FESTIVAL, on a small scale, was held by the Gregorian Association, on Thursday, the 12th ult., in All Saints' Church, Lower Clapton: the choir, numbering about 130 voices, being under the direction of Mr. C. Warwick Jordan. The music was, we believe, virtually the same as that which will be heard at the forthcoming Annual Festival at St. Paul's, on which occasion we propose to deal with it more fully.

M. OCTAVE FOUQUÉ, whose death was announced in Paris, on the 24th ult., was better known as a critic than as a composer of music. His compositions are frequently met with in Parisian concert-programmes, but his operatic work has not yet been made public. His best literary productions were collected and published in the autumn of last year under the title of "Les Révolutionnaires de la Musique." In these essays M. Fouqué discussed with much acumen and grace the influence of Lesueur on Berlioz, the sojourn of Berlioz in Russia, the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven, Wagner's theories of the Music-drama and Glinka's works. He wrote a biography of the latter composer, and contributed many articles to the République Française and other journals. His writings are distinguished for valuable aperçus, and as a critic he displayed both taste and judgment.

UNDER the conductorship of Mr. J. H. Maunder a very successful "Ladies' Night" brought the second season of the Civil Service Vocal Union to a close, the Concert being given in the large hall at Cannon Street Hotel, on Friday evening, the 13th ult. The programme was well rendered, especial praise being due to the choir for the precision and delicacy of expression displayed in the interpretation of the part-music. Vocal solos were contributed by Mr. E. G. Richardson, Mr. Trelawney Cobham and Mr. H. W. Schartau, and trios by Messrs. Maunder, Nettleship and Baker. The instrumental music comprised a pianoforte solo by Mr. C. Gardner, who performed his own composition; Dussek's duet for violin and pianoforte, Adagio, Cantabile and Rondo Sonata, in B flat (Hon. E. P. Thesiger and Mr. Austen Leigh); and a flute solo by Mr. C. Spencer West.

AT Porlock, in the parish church, on the 8th ult., the portion of "The Messiah" relating to the Death and Resurrection of our Lord was given as an Anthem at the evening service. The church was crowded, and many were unable to gain admission. The solos were sung by Mrs. Anderson and Messrs. Erridge and Hook. The orchestra was small but complete, consisting of twenty instruments. Mr. Sadler was leader, the Rev. Walter Hook Conductor. The hymns were accompanied by the orchestra with very grand effect, and after the service Beethoven's Second Symphony was played. This is the third time lately that a band has been used in Porlock church; on this occasion, however, there was a great advance, musically speaking, and the orchestra played with remarkable taste and precision. Professionals and amateurs were about equally represented.

A VERY successful Concert was given on the 12th ult. by the Paddington Chapel Choral Union, under the conductorship of Mr. J. H. Moon, R.A.M. Favourable mention must be made of the rendering of Bishop's "Now tramp" and Mozart's "Calm is the glassy ocean," the solo in each of these being well sung by Miss Gina Fitzgerald, who was also greatly applauded for Pontet's "Tit for tat," and encored in her second song, "Little April Fool" (Roedel). Madame Evans-Warwick, who replaced Madame Edwyn Frith at very short notice, sang songs by Blumenthal and Behrend with much taste. Mr. Edwyn Frith and Mr. E. Hall contributed some popular ballads, which were well received; and Mr. Windeyer Clarke, solo pianist, was obliged to repeat Walter Macfarren's Tarentella in C minor. Mr. Horace G. Holmes was a very efficient accompanist.

SOME attractive Recitals on an organ built by Messrs. Maley, Young and Oldknow, for the Parish Church of Wareham, in Dorsetshire, have been given at the builders' factory, King's Road, N.W., during the past month. The organ, which is to cost a little more than £1,000, is an effective three-manual instrument, containing nine stops on the great organ, the same number on the choir, twelve on the swell, and four on the pedal organ (the last-named being particularly effective), and the usual accessory movement. The opening Recital was given on Monday, the 2nd ult., by Mr. E. H. Turpin, who was followed by Mr. Geo. C. Martin, of St. Paul's Cathedral, Mr. W. S. Hoyte and Mr. A. L. Tamplin, all of whom contributed interesting programmes.

THE St. Andrew's Choral Society (Shepherd's Bush) gave its closing Concert of the season at the Athenæum, Goldhawk Road, on the 4th ult., before a large and appreciative audience. The first part of the programme consisted of Haydn's "Spring" and Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor, well rendered by Miss Florence S. Peat. The second part was devoted to Rogers's new humorous Cantata "Beauty and the Beast," performed for the first time in London. This charming little work was admirably rendered by the choir and orchestra. The principal vocal parts were given with great effect by Miss Florence Davis, Miss Minnie Hyem, Mr. H. L. Fulkerson and Mr. Frederic Penna, whose efforts elicited much applause, several of the numbers being enthusiastically encored. Mr. Felix Somner led the orchestra, and Mr. S. Kilbey conducted.

THE National Eisteddfod of Wales, which is to be held at Cardiff in August next, under circumstances which have already been referred to in these columns, is to be patronised by Her Majesty the Queen, who, it has been pointed out, had, as a Princess, conferred a similar honour fifty years back on an Eisteddfod held in the same town. This concession is due to the efforts of Sir E. J. Reed, M.P., the member for Cardiff, and the inhabitants of that town are much rejoiced at the success which has attended his application. There is every reason to suppose that the forthcoming proceedings will be accompanied with great éclat. The local promoters of the Eisteddfod are certainly leaving no stone unturned in their efforts to render it successful in an almost unprecedented degree.

THE Leytonstone Choral Society gave its first Concert on Monday evening, the 2nd ult., which was a great success. The programme included Gounod's "Ave Verum," Mendelssohn's "Judge me, O God," Morley's "My bonny lass," and Leslie's "Lullaby of Life," all of which were rendered with admirable precision. Much credit is due to the Conductor, Mr. J. W. Ulyett, for the manner in which he has trained the choir in so short a time. The soloists were Miss Margaret Hoare, Mr. J. C. Butterfield and Mr. H. Jones. Miss Dakin presided at the pianoforte. The Leytonstone Orchestral Society also assisted at the Concert, the several works performed, under the direction of Mr. Haynes, adding greatly to the evening's entertainment.

A CONCERT in aid of the North-West London Hospital was given at the Tufnell Park Church Room on Thursday evening, the 5th ult. The programme included Toy Symphonies by Haydn and Romberg, played by the St. Thomas's Musical Union, under the conductorship of Mr. George J. Levy. The principal artists, all of whom were well received, were Miss Mina Poole, Mdle. Angelina del Santo, Miss Agnes M. Everist, Mr. Edward Hall and Mr. Weldon Hydon; solo violin, Chevalier Agostino Robbio; solo violoncello, Mr. H. C. Manning; solo pianoforte, Madame Stella Damerick (pianiste to the Queen of Spain). Mr. J. Farquharson Walenn also contributed pianoforte solos, and Miss F. M. Strutt Cavell accompanied. The Concert was very successful.

THE second Annual Orchestral Concert of the South London Musical Institute was given under the direction of Mr. L. C. Venables at the Hall, Camberwell New Road, on Tuesday, the 10th ult. Schubert's "Rosamunde" Overture, Haydn's Symphony in G major, "The Military," a selection from "Zampa," and a March from a Suite by Lachner served to show the excellent quality of the band. Mr. Gatehouse played De Bériot's First Violin Concerto, with orchestral accompaniment, in a manner that won marked approval from the audience. Mrs. C. Edwards, Miss Eliza Thomas and Mr. Sinclair Dunn gave vocal selections, and Madame Clippindale contributed two pianoforte solos.

ORGAN Recitals at St. John's, Waterloo Road, have been given during the past month by Mr. Albert E. Bishop, Organist of St. Mary Abchurch, City, on the 3rd ult., and by Mr. A. Wilkinson Jones, F.C.O., on the 19th ult. The organ, which may be inspected after any Recital, is well worthy of a visit, particularly from those who contemplate restorations or additions to an instrument under their own care.

MRS. A. J. LAYTON gave her second Annual Concert on Friday evening, the 13th ult., at the Chelsea Vestry Hall, before a large audience. Several pieces in the programme were given with exceptional merit—viz., the songs of Miss Annie Layton, Miss Isabel Browning and Mr. A. J. Mayers—and the duets of Messrs. Cecil Traherne and Ernest Cecil were exceedingly well rendered. Mrs. Layton was much applauded for her performance of Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor, accompanied by a very efficient orchestra. The other items were the March from Mr. Joseph Simes's Cantata "Priscilla," and the Overture "Chevalier de Breton." Mr. Henry A. Evans conducted.

AN excellent Concert was given in Oaklands Chapel, Shepherd's Bush, by the choir, assisted by a few members of neighbouring choirs, on Thursday, the 12th ult. The programme included Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion" and "Judge me, O God," Beethoven's "Hallelujah," Haydn's "The heavens are telling," Woodward's "The radiant morn," and a selection of airs from well-known Oratorios. The soloists were Madame Evans-Warwick, Miss Russell, Miss Burke and Mrs. Jeffreys; Messrs. Grimsdick, H. Evans, Pullen, Morrell and Warren, all of whom were well received by a numerous audience. Mr. Hedley Carus presided at the organ and Miss Millen at the harmonium. Mr. C. G. Bell conducted.

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT awarded the National Prizes offered by the Academical Board of Trinity College, London, in connection with the examinations in elementary musical knowledge, to the successful candidates, on the occasion of the half-yearly distribution of diplomas, certificates and other prizes by the Warden of the College on the 10th ult. The prize-winners were Harold D. Phillips (Peterborough), Judith Mary E. Miles (Liverpool), Charles Milnes (Liverpool), William R. Thomas (Haverfordwest), and Eliza Wright (Rotherham), the total number of entries for the examination being 3,780. On the same evening there was a Students' Concert, which was highly successful.

MR. GEAUSSENT's Choir gave a performance of Gounod's "Redemption" at St. James's Hall, on Tuesday, the 10th ult. The rendering of the choral music was in every way praiseworthy, the effects both of delicacy and force intended by the composer being produced with remarkable success. The chief soloists were Misses Mary Davies, Marian McKenzie and De Fonblanque, Mr. E. Lloyd and Mr. Santley, most of whom are favourably known in connection with the work. Miss McKenzie, who sang the contralto music for the first time, deserves a special word of praise. Mr. Geaussett conducted, and Mr. E. G. Meeres presided at the organ.—Times.

A SUCCESSFUL Entertainment was given at the Lecture Hall, Highbury Quadrant, on behalf of the organ fund, on the 9th ult., under the direction of Mrs. C. J. Birch. The principal attraction was the performance of Root's Cantata "The Haymakers" by Mrs. Birch's pupils at Mrs. Girling's School, Englefield Road, with scenery, dresses and dramatic action, the work having been arranged for the stage by Mrs. Birch. The singing of Masters E. and H. Birch, E. Girling and F. White was much admired. Miss Berrie Stephens contributed songs, and pianoforte solos were given by Mrs. Birch and Mr. Fountain Meen.

M. ALEXANDRE GUILMANT's Mass in C was sung—for the first time, we believe, in England—at the High celebration on Easter Day, at All Saints' Church, Margaret Street, under the direction of Mr. W. S. Hoyte, to whom thanks are due for bringing this work forward. It is scored for orchestra, and on the present occasion an adaptation was made in manuscript for English use; the work may, however, be had as published in France with the original Latin words.

A PERFORMANCE of Miss C. Holland's new Cantata "Miss Kilmansegg and her Golden Leg," was announced to be given at Grosvenor House, on the 27th ult. (too late for notice in our present number). The work will be repeated at Steinway Hall on the 2nd inst., and at Grosvenor House on the 4th inst. All the performances are for charitable purposes.

THE Concert of the London Sunday School Choir, at the Royal Albert Hall on the 4th ult., attracted a large audience, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh being present. A selection of sacred and secular music was very creditably rendered by the choir of 1,600 selected voices, conducted by Mr. Luther Hinton, applause being liberally bestowed, particularly for a setting of the Magnificat by Mr. David Davies, written specially for the choir. The programme was agreeably diversified by violin solos by Miss Marie Schumann and the singing of Senorita Lucia Carreras and "The Family Quartet." Mr. W. G. Horneast presided at the organ.

THE third of a series of Concerts in aid of the choir and organ fund of Trinity Chapel, Brixton, was given in the Lecture Hall adjoining the chapel, on Friday evening, the 6th ult. The programme included vocal solos by Miss Gwynne, Miss E. Oldham, Miss Laura Shrimpton, Mrs. Dudley, Mr. Eos Dyffryn, R.A.M., Mr. J. Ogier and Mr. Thornton Colvin, and a good selection of well-rendered part-music by the choir. Miss Cutting contributed two pianoforte solos, and Mr. Magnus Manson and Mr. W. Wood solos on the violin and flute respectively. Mr. A. J. Crabb (the Organist) conducted.

ON Wednesday, the 18th ult., a Special Service was held at Lewisham High Road Congregational Church, at the close of which Spohr's "Last Judgment" was performed by the members of the choir, numbering sixty voices, under the direction of Mr. E. A. Miles. The soloists were Madame Riechelmann, Miss A. Miles, Mr. E. Bryant and Mr. E. Pierpoint, the singing of Mr. Bryant being especially commendable. Mr. W. Byrom, Organist of the church, presided at the organ. The offertory was in aid of church expenses. The Oratorio throughout was most satisfactorily rendered.

DR. SPARROW SIMPSON, the Succentor of St. Paul's Cathedral, requests us to state, in answer to numerous inquiries, that he has still a few copies remaining of his "Fourth Report on the Music in St. Paul's Cathedral," and that he will be happy to send a copy to any clergyman, precentor or organist who may apply before the store of copies is exhausted. Stamps for postage need not be sent. Letters should be addressed to the Succentor, at 9, Amen Court, E.C. Gentlemen not receiving copies will be so good as to conclude that their applications have not been received in time.

THE members of the St. Mark's Choral Society, North Audley Street, gave their second Concert on Monday, the 16th ult., at the Schoolroom, in George Street, Grosvenor Square. The first part of the programme consisted of Sterndale Bennett's Sacred Cantata "The Woman of Samaria," the solos being intrusted to Miss Ellis, Miss Hubbard, and Mr. Tabb. The second portion consisted of Niels W. Gade's "Spring's Message" and miscellaneous pieces. The whole performance was highly satisfactory. Mr. T. Mountain conducted, and Mr. W. Bolton was the accompanist.

THE members of the Finchley Choral Society gave a very successful Concert, on the 12th ult., at the National Schools, Church End, Finchley. The first part of the programme consisted of Hofmann's "Melusina"; the second part was miscellaneous, and included "Spring's Message" (Gade), "Lord Ullin's Daughter" (Arthur Jackson), &c. The soloists were Mrs. John Gallatly, Miss Stephenson, Mr. J. E. Collister, Mr. J. M. Buzin, Mr. F. Bristol and Mr. A. O. Miller. Miss Mackness, R.A.M., was the accompanist, and Mr. A. A. Yeatman conducted.

AT the Festival of the Sons of the Clergy, which takes place at St. Paul's Cathedral, on the 9th of the present month at 3.30 p.m., Dr. Hiller's Cantata "A Song of Victory" is to be given in its entirety as the Anthem, of course with full orchestral accompaniment; the selected Magnificat and Nunc dimittis is the already published composition of Mr. Birket Foster, in A, also scored for orchestra. Sullivan's Overture, "In Memoriam," will precede the service. The Festival of the Gregorian Association takes place on the following evening, Thursday, the 10th inst., at 7 o'clock.

A VERY successful Concert was given at Northfield Hall, Highgate, on the 5th ult., under the direction of Mr. George D. Atkin, the proceeds being for the Royal National Lifeboat Institution. The vocalists were Miss Gina Fitzgerald, Miss Frances H. Smith, Messrs. Arthur Thompson, Edward Simmons and Henry Prenton; Miss Kate Chaplin (violin), Mr. W. Reynolds (cello), Mr. F. M. Wood (clarinet), Miss Nellie Chaplin (piano) and Mr. H. Coleby (harp). A small orchestra contributed a Triumphant March (Alfred J. Dye) and Handel's Largo for strings, harp and organ.

THE Concert given by the students of the Watford School of Music on the 3rd ult. was highly successful, although Mr. H. Baumer, the head master of the school, was unable to attend from indisposition. Pianoforte solos were excellently rendered by Miss Plews, Miss Edwards, Miss Kingham, and Miss M. B. Grindley, and a violin solo by Miss Ray elicited much applause. The vocalists were Miss Leménager, Miss Alice Wilson, Miss Brooks, Messrs. Charles Healey and Young, all of whom were highly effective. The programme also included some part-songs, which were carefully rendered.

MR. GEORGE MERRITT, Graduate and Member of Council of the Tonic Sol-fa College, and Choirmaster of Wycliffe Chapel, Philpot Street, was presented by the congregation and choir with a handsome marble timepiece and a purse containing twenty-five sovereigns at the annual church meeting on Wednesday, March 21. On a gold plate attached to the timepiece is the following inscription: "Presented to Mr. George Merritt, with a purse of gold, by the Congregation and Choir of Wycliffe Chapel, as a mark of their appreciation and esteem of his services for many years as Choirmaster, March 21, 1883."

THE last Concert of the season of the Highbury Philharmonic Society will take place on Monday evening, the 7th inst. at the Athenæum, Highbury New Park, under the conductorship of Dr. Bridge. The first part of the programme will consist of J. F. Barnett's Cantata "The Ancient Mariner," and the second will comprise a new Motet for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra, the composition of the Conductor, entitled "A Hymn to the Creator," together with two or three other works written expressly for the Society.

THE first Concert of the Norwood Philharmonic Society was given in the Norwood Institute on Friday evening, the 6th ult. The soprano solo in Himmel's Anthem was most commendably interpreted by Miss Patten. Mr. John F. Boardman presided at the organ.

MR. THOMAS MOUNTAIN, Organist of St. Mark's Church, North Audley Street, gave an Organ Recital on the new electric organ, built by Messrs. Bryceson and Co., at Christ Church, New Maldon, on Sunday evening, the 22nd ult., when a miscellaneous selection was highly appreciated by a large congregation.

THE Festival of the Church of England Sunday School Institute, the musical arrangements for which are undertaken by the Lay Helpers' Association, takes place in St. Paul's Cathedral, on Monday evening, the 7th inst. The service will be choral but, as regards the music, of a thoroughly plain character.

MR. MACKENZIE's new Opera "Colomba" is to be given by Herr Pollini, as the first novelty, during his coming autumn season, at the Stadt Theater, Hamburg.

A NEW Cantata, composed for the occasion by Dr. Stainer, will probably be amongst the novelties of the Three Choirs' Festival to be held next autumn at Gloucester. The Cantata will be of a sacred character, the libretto, selected from the Holy Scriptures, treating of the subject of St. Mary Magdalene.

THE Lady Goldsmid Scholarship, for female pianists, at the Royal Academy of Music, was competed for at the Institution on the 23rd ult.: elected, Annie V. Muckle. The examiners were Messrs. H. R. Eyers, F. B. Jewson, Harold Thomas, F. Westlake and G. A. Macfarren (chairman).

REVIEWS.

Henry VIII. Opéra en quatre actes. Poème de Léonce Détroyat et Armand Silvestre. Musique de Camille Saint-Saëns. Paris: Durand, Schönewerk et Cie.

This important work, the first grand opera of M. Saint-Saëns, and the latest novelty at the Grand Opéra of Paris, was conceived, it is stated, during a tour made by the composer through Spain, in company with the violinist, Paul Viardot. Having discussed the matter with M. Détroyat, at Madrid, M. Saint-Saëns broached it to M. Silvestre on his return to Paris. That author approved, and at once, assisted by Détroyat, set about the libretto. The work appears to have had a singularly fortunate experience in its early stages. M. Vaucorbeil was willing to produce it, musicians of the highest eminence approved the experiment, and all artistic Paris assembled on the 5th of March to note the result. That the verdict was not unanimously applauding readers of musical news well know. Nevertheless the opera keeps the stage and seems likely to do so for some time to come. It is impossible for a reviewer, looking only at a pianoforte score, and without the advantage of witnessing a representation, to appraise the exact merits of this work. We can, however, give a tolerably clear idea of its character and claims, and now proceed to the task.

The first act opens in a hall of the royal palace overlooking a public place, and is ushered in by an orchestral movement, Maestoso, the theme of which again appears when the King throws off his spiritual allegiance to Rome amid the acclamations of the people. Something of a broad and simple old-English character marks the subject in question, as a quotation of the leading phrase suffices to prove:—

No. 1. Maestoso.

Very little development or treatment of the melody takes place, and that little is limited to the passage in the sixth bar, which gives rise to a few imitations. The effect of the movement is happy, and the mind is prepared for serious events as, without pausing, the music changes its rhythm, the curtain rises, and the Duke of Norfolk converses with Don Gomez, the newly arrived Spanish Ambassador. The two gentlemen begin with mutual civilities, and then Don Gomez explains that his presence as ambassador is due to the influence of Queen Catherine, while his object is to be near the queen of his heart, Anne Boleyn. He informs Norfolk, further, that Catherine knows of and furthers their attachment, and that she holds a letter—a pledge of love—from Anne to him. Norfolk is glad to hear all this, and wishes Don Gomez happiness, but warns him against the dangerous character of Henry, who is suspected of wanting Anne for himself. Such is the substance of a rather long dialogue between the two personages. The interview, however, cannot be called wearisome, since the composer, by frequently varying his music, sustains interest. Beginning in the plain diatonic style of the Prelude, he passes to a short recitativo parlante, thence to a graceful cantabile for the lover; then to an Allegro, in which the orchestra has a theme obviously intended to represent the beauty and brightness of Anne, and so on. In all this we discover no set form. The music adapts itself to every dramatic exigency that can be called imperative or even important, yet the effect is not fragmentary. M. Saint-Saëns works out the main sections of the scene at a length which suffices, and he does not perplex the ear by incessant modulations that give an idea of unrest. At the present day this last may be called a peculiarity, very few dramatic composers having the hardihood to continue for half a dozen bars in the same key, or to employ full closes within a few pages distance of each other. It should also be pointed out that, in this scene, the voices are allowed the prominence and distinction rightly their due. The Boleyn motif first appears as follows in the pianoforte score, and charms at once by its lightness and grace:—

No. 2. Allegro non troppo.

This, with the theme of Don Gomez's cantabile, is largely used by the orchestra during the remainder of the scene, but there are other significant phrases, the meaning of which does not come out till later. So far the work creates a favourable impression. It is made musically attractive and dramatically significant by legitimate means that never err on the side of complexity, and may even be styled simple.

When the dialogue ends, a noise is heard in the public place below, and some gentlemen of the court enter the hall, bearing the news of Buckingham's condemnation to death. This gives occasion for an ensemble, in which the gentlemen express their surprise, pity and indignation. M. Saint-Saëns employs a quartet with the chorus in certain parts of this movement, but he adheres to the plain and simple style already shown, and secures variety by using now and then single voices, the effect being as good in a dramatic as in a musical sense. Occasionally the chorus is heard alone, or attended only by one instrument; and it may be said, in a general sense, that the orchestra, while accorded a measure of thematic independence, is never obtrusive. Moreover, the movement, though not in any special "form," is orderly and symmetrical to a degree which satisfies requirement. It may hardly be "intense" enough to please certain tastes, save at the point where the quartet expresses anger against the King, and the chorus follows with pity for his victim. Here an effect of contrast is impressive and of the happiest kind. The chorus ending with a succession of tonic and subdominant chords in the key of C, for voices only, those chords are taken up pompously by the orchestra as the King enters, and is received by the courtiers, who have just been railing at him behind his back, with "Hail to the magnanimous prince, who punishes crime, and rewards virtue," &c. This done, they file out, bowing low, and leaving the monarch, Surrey, Norfolk and Don Gomez together.

After the King's entry a new scene begins, in which Henry welcomes the Ambassador to his court, doing so by means of a somewhat extended movement, grazioso, in F major. In this address he mentions a rumour that love had drawn the Ambassador to England, promises to befriend his suit, and tells him that, as he is about to present Catherine with a new maid of honour before the whole court, an opportunity will arise to thank the Queen for her influence. This information disquiets Don Gomez, who suspects that Anne is the lady in question, and with his exit the scene ends. The musical interest here is chiefly due to orchestral themes, of which three are prominent throughout—first, the Boleyn motive (Ex. 2.); next, a subject heard in the first scene when reference is made by Norfolk to Henry's unscrupulous character—and, last, a passage identified with the monarch's courtly grace:—

These are admirably employed as Henry utters his greeting, and form an intelligible commentary upon words which in themselves have little more than ceremonial significance. In the next scene the plot thickens: Henry talks to Surrey about the hostility of the Pope to his divorce from Catherine, and professes himself a slave to love, although a King of men. This is done in recitative with occasional interjections of the motive of unscrupulousness, and following it comes an air in F sharp minor, "Qui donc commande," made up of a Larghetto leading to an Allegro agitato and ending with a return to the first section. The voice is here supreme throughout, only the simplest forms of accompaniment being adopted. We quote the most salient passage in the Larghetto as a sample of its sober and restrained style:—

As soon as the air is concluded, the Queen enters and the fifth scene begins. Catherine is heralded by a representative melody quite typical of her gentle and pious character, and in admirable contrast to the lightsome grace of the King's theme. Here it is:—

No. 6. Moderato.

She asks for what purpose Henry has requested her presence, and learns he is about to offer her a new lady of honour, heaven-sent from the Court of France. Catherine knows to whom he refers, but, keeping her own counsel, accepts the gift as coming from her King and husband, and, then begs, as a favour, the life of Buckingham. Henry refuses, and the rest of the number is taken up by a long duet for the royal pair.

The whole of that part of the duet referring to Anne and Buckingham, though tuneful and interesting, can hardly be called striking and dramatic. But a higher and more forceful note is struck when the disappointed Queen charges Henry with no longer loving her, and the King answers that their marriage is opposed to divine law. Here genuine dramatic vigour is shown, and some new themes sustain the melodic interest. There are, besides, some points of effective contrast, as, for example, when Henry drops his stern mood and puts on a smile; the composer emphasising the act by changing from his passionate music to the seductive little theme quoted above as representative of royal graciousness. The duet works up to a good climax, but must suffer in representation by the King and Queen remaining on the stage and watching the entrance of the court, among whom is Anne Boleyn conducted by Surrey. The procession, if so it may be called, moves to a pretty Andante grazioso in F major, having the subjoined as its most important phrases:—

No. 7. Andante grazioso.

These are employed in conjunction with the Boleyn motive and the motive of unscrupulousness as Henry first expresses his surprise to find Anne and Gomez recognise each other, and then formally presents the lady to his Queen as her attendant. A short ensemble for the courtiers and Catherine follows, based upon the Andante grazioso; the music of which is also heard as Anne does homage to her new mistress, and as Henry creates her Marchioness of Pembroke, and the courtiers follow with exclamations of surprise. At this point the dramatists secure a great effect of contrast. The sound of lugubrious music is heard outside the palace, and the Queen, with all the court, moves to the windows to look upon the death march of the unfortunate Buckingham. They thus leave Henry and Anne together, and as the monarch begins to press his suit, the notes of a "De profundis" strike solemnly upon the ear; while Catherine, looking from the window, bewails the "spectacle of horror." Surely nothing more sinister as accompaniments of a wooing could be imagined. The substance of the March music is given below:—

The death hymn calls for no quotation, nothing save plain diatonic harmonies being employed. Under the influence of these mournful sounds Anne ceases to hear the King's honied words. Terror possesses her, and a horrible vision of a bloody axe, rising before her eyes, extorts cries of fright. This is attended in the orchestra by the last three notes of the March theme given above, which notes may now be called the axe motive. Henry seeks to comfort his "dove," as he terms her, but the "De profundis" swells louder and louder, while high up in the orchestra the short, sharp axe motive cleaves its way. Then a great ensemble begins, the chorus, in seven parts, lamenting the fate of Buckingham, while the five principals, Henry, Catherine, Anne, Don Gomez and Norfolk, express their individual emotions. The vocal music is built almost throughout upon the themes of the Death March (the axe motive being frequently heard) and, though by no means elaborate, brings the first act to a striking close upon a fine dramatic situation. It thus goes very far indeed to atone for decided want of power—though not of grace and beauty—in the opening scenes.

The second act, preluded by an Andante con moto and Moderato, which anticipate some portions of a duet for Henry and Anne, takes place in Richmond Park, and opens with a two-part chorus (sopranos and tenors), sung à propos to the royal pages, who are amusing themselves with arms. Dramatically this chorus is quite superfluous, though the authors would perhaps urge that something light and pleasant should be inserted to relieve the sombre tint of the story. The number is distinctly French in idea and treatment. It bears its character on the face of the opening bars:—

No. 9. Allegro.

As the courtiers and pages move away, Don Gomez enters, troubled about the prospect of his love, because conscious that Henry is a dangerous rival. His soliloquy takes high rank among the numbers in the work. It moves steadily up to a climax of passion, and has the advantage of two themes of varied, intelligible and suggestive character. One of these follows the opening recitative, to express the Ambassador's disquiet:—

No. 10. Allegro non troppo.

The other, heard at the beginning of Act I, as Don Gomez tells Norfolk of Anne's love for him, now reappears as he marvels at the irony that joined the face of an angel to a treacherous heart:—

No. 11.

This acts as a kind of second subject to an air which approaches very nearly to a recognised classic form.

At the close of the air a new scene begins with the entry of Anne, accompanied by court ladies who offer her flowers, singing a pretty two-part chorus, and receiving her thanks in the same strain. The ladies retire, leaving Anne and Don Gomez to a stormy interview, the Ambassador being full of reproaches, while Anne protests her affection. M. Saint-Saëns has not omitted to give his music contrasted character here, nor has he forgotten, while Anne speaks, to use the love theme quoted above. The maid of honour has just declared her constancy when Henry appears, attended by an orchestral unison passage having the same rhythm as the Death March. He approaches the couple to the Boleyn motive, and gaily addresses the Ambassador, who discreetly retires, leaving the stage free for the inevitable duet between Henry and Anne. This important number begins with an Allegro molto, constructed entirely upon two themes, which the orchestra never ceases to employ in some form or other while the King urges his love and the maid of honour resists. The first and more important will be recognised as forming part of Buckingham's Death March:—

No. 12. Allegro molto.

The second runs thus:—

No. 13.

The Allegro leads to a short Moderato, followed by an Allegretto, wherein Anne shows signs of yielding. Presently the Allegro resumes, and the King's characteristic theme is heard combined with the motive of unscrupulousness—

No. 14.

when he formally declares his love. Anne refusing to become his mistress, Henry asks, "Who spoke of that? Be my wife." Anne answers, "Vain word! The Queen!" Unabashed, the King assures her that Catherine will soon be Queen no longer, and as he does so the more salient musical features of the Royal duet in Act I. reappear. The splendid temptation now begins to work; Henry becomes more fervid; eventually Anne consents, and an Allegretto lusigniero expresses their mutual joy. The two themes of this movement, while contrasted, are melodious. They were the subjects of the Entr'acte, and are now heard again under the advantages of recognised significance. But the duet does not end with their measured prettiness. Henry once more asks for an assurance that he is accepted, and swears that Anne shall become his wife. As he does so the theme from the Death March (Ex. 12) accompanies his words, and follows him as he goes away, leaving Anne to pour out her emotions alone. A more sinister ending to a love-duet could hardly be conceived. Anne's air is an outburst of gratified pride and vanity, but fails, we think, in dramatic force, mainly from the employment of a chief theme which is far too weak in character, if, indeed, it have any character at all. But M. Saint-Saëns atones for this in the subsequent scene for Anne and Catherine. The Queen has come to warn her servant against the downward course upon which she has entered, and grave, sweet music attends her, enveloping the stage, one might fancy, in an atmosphere of purity and dignity. Under these conditions Catherine reproaches Anne's ingratitude, with gentleness at first, but ultimately with spirit. Anne's temper soon rebels, and turning upon the Queen she exclaims, "Torture me, if you like, but your husband belongs to me." This checks Catherine, who, resuming her calmness and dignity, appeals to the justice of Heaven. We have here a scene of marked interest, both musical and dramatic. It is well conceived and wrought out with a skilful hand. At its close the King enters, attended by his Court. He frowns upon Catherine, who, in answer to Anne's "Sire, help me!" reminds him that she is Queen. The King replies, "Queen till the law has pronounced the contrary." At that moment the Papal Legate is announced, and advances to the sound of a stately melody. He brings unfavourable words from Rome, but Henry brusquely puts their hearing off till the morrow, and a grand fête populaire begins.

The ballet music comprises—first, an Introduction and Entrée des Clans; second, an Idylle Ecosaise; third, La Fête du Houblon; fourth, Danse de la Gipsy; fifth, Pas des Highlanders; sixth, a Scherzetto; seventh, a Sarabande, Gigue and Finale. Without stopping to comment upon this bright and lively music, with its frequent English and Scottish melodies, we may notice the fact that M. Saint-Saëns has been reproached for bringing Highlanders and their national music to the English court at a time when the two kingdoms were independent. Surely this is hypercriticism. Royal festivities are as free to choose their colour and character as any other; while it should not be forgotten that Henry's sister was the Scottish Queen. We cannot join in censure so strained. Upon the finale to the ballet the curtain descends. The scene has been brilliant and joyous, but the skeleton has remained before us all the time—not even hiding in a cupboard.

The third act opens in the palace, as Surrey acquaints Henry that the Legate requests an audience on imperative business. This the royal lips angrily refuse; Surrey retires, and the King vents his wrath against Rome in a passionate scena of a varied character, but throughout powerfully accompanied. M. Saint-Saëns here shows that he can write finely declamatory phrases for the voice. Henry passes to a softer mood as he thinks of Anne, to whom he has granted an instant audience, and when the lady enters he salutes her with all the old grace in a charmingly accompanied passage. Anne wishes him to reconsider his offer, but only arouses the jealousy of his nature. Henry demands if she loves another. She replies, "I love but you," whereupon the King, looking her straight in the face, while the distinctive phrase of Buckingham's Death March is heard from the orchestra, answers significantly, "A good thing for you." The dialogue of the foregoing scene is frequently accompanied by motives previously heard. We do not, however, stop to point them out, as occasions for the use of some can easily be imagined. Let us simply state that the composer sustains the strength with which the act opened. Norfolk now enters to announce that the Legate insists upon an audience. "Let him enter, then," retorts the angry monarch, the motive of unscrupulousness attending his words. The Legate appears to the music of his representative theme, and begins, "Sire," but Henry cuts him short, sending Norfolk to warn Catherine that the hour of her trial has come, and graciously dismissing Anne as the strains of their love-duet fall upon the ear. Then he turns to the Legate: "I listen." The Cardinal, again accompanied by his theme—proceeds to remonstrate with Henry, and warns him of their fate who disobey the behests of Rome. The King takes it very coolly, and says that the days of Frederic Barbarossa are gone by. He will appeal from the Pope to the people, create a schism, and take the consequences, unless Rome ratifies the expected decree of divorce. Then he flings out of the room, attended by the motive of unscrupulousness, leaving the Legate to ponder his words. That reverend personage proceeds to do so in an air, "Fatal pride of kings," which brings the scene to an ineffective end, and need not detain us here. The Hall of Judgment is next shown; a long processional movement being played as the royal and distinguished personages engaged in this true cause célèbre enter and take their places. Judging from the pianoforte score, this Maestoso is not worthy the occasion because lacking breadth and dignity, while the appearance of the leading characters is not marked with sufficient distinctiveness. A short chorus for the judges and spectators, "The cause is grave and solemn," opens the informal proceedings. In this the orchestra has little to do, simple and massive vocal harmonies being justly relied upon for appropriate effect. After this, Garter proclaims the Court open, the judges echo his words in four-part chorus, and the Archbishop of Canterbury, responded to by all present, offers a prayer for Divine guidance, which, beginning in the simplest fashion presently develops into an elaborate and imposing ensemble. There are other movements of the kind in this act, as we shall see, and all tend to prove that M. Saint-Saëns can handle masses with effect. He does not fritter away his strength in efforts to make each part individual, to the loss of breadth and power, but takes care that the prevailing sentiment shall have predominant musical expression. At the close of the prayer, Henry and Catherine are summoned into Court, both answering as a snatch of the processional theme is played. The King then lays his case before the judges in a solo full of dignity; and Catherine, in turn, makes her defence, or rather, as in Shakespeare, offers a final appeal to her merciless lord. The composer should here have put forth all his powers, but we must confess that the music, as it lies before us, is a disappointment. It is not without pathos, but it fails to express the dramatic significance of the situation, and lacks the power that, in the words of our great poet, raises the Queen to the dignity of a true heroine, making her more than Royal. It would seem as though M. Saint-Saëns had no great confidence in his own strength at this juncture, for he has introduced the chorus, who break in occasionally with words of pity, and so divert attention. There are, however, in the concerted music some fine and striking passages. At the close, Henry exclaims, "That is enough," the Queen cries "I am lost!" and Garter declares the case heard, unless a champion chooses to intervene on behalf of Catherine. This brings forward her countryman, Don Gomez, who protests against the entire proceedings, amid the murmurs of the crowd, uttered à bouche fermée. Henry proudly answers that he and his people are not to be frightened, and dashes into an animated theme—which the by-standers take up, and make the ground-work of a loyal and patriotic chorus. Presently Cranmer pronounces "nul et contraire aux lois l'hymen à nous soumis," doing so to the alternation of the common chords of C sharp major and G major—a sufficient proof of the composer's freedom. Catherine at once pours forth her grief and anger in a passionate solo, the music of which is full of dramatic energy and constitutes one of the most powerful pages in the work. At its close the Queen leaves the Hall, the motive of unscrupulousness ringing out as she does so. But the proceedings are not yet over. The Legate appears on the scene, carrying a Papal Bull, while the orchestra ingeniously combines his motive with the theme of the processional music. His Eminence wastes no time, but in the Holy Father's name ratifies Henry's first marriage and annuls all contrary decisions. The lion is now bearded in his den, and we do not wait long for his roar. "My subjects shall give you answer," retorts Henry; the doors are thrown open and a crowd rushes in, of whom the King demands, "Will you receive your laws from a foreigner?" Question follows question in the same sense, and to all the reply is "Never." Then Henry proclaims himself head of the English Church, and the pledged husband of Anne Boleyn. The rest is an ensemble of unusual breadth and sonority, having as its chief theme that which preluded the entire Opera (Ex. 1). M. Saint-Saëns has here crowned the edifice of his concerted music and may be congratulated upon having given a worthy ending to a long and trying act.

The last act opens in the apartments of Queen Anne, and is heralded by a movement of sinister import, phrases appearing the significance of which we know full well, among them those of the Death March. All the same the stage presents a pleasant picture; Anne watching from her chair a dance in the palace gardens to the music of a charming Tempo di minuetto. As the dance goes on, Surrey and Norfolk converse apart on the King's evil mood, and suspects that he doubts the Queen, the scene presently ending with the arrival of Don Gomez—a bird of evil omen. Don Gomez salutes Anne to the pretty strain of the Boleyn motive; explains that he is the bearer of a special message from Catherine to Henry, and requests to be left alone with the Queen. The two lords and the dancers thereupon retire, accompanied by the Death March theme. We next learn from a brief and powerfully written dialogue that Catherine still holds the letter which resulted in Don Gomez's appointment, and reveals the relations between him and Anne. The Death motive throws its gloomy shadow over the words, and Anne is in a state of terror when the King enters to another snatch of the fatal march, brusquely dismissing Anne, and, turning upon the Ambassador, says in effect, "Leave the country; I have only allowed you to remain so long because I wished to penetrate a mystery." Don Gomez answers in turn that only duty to Catherine had kept him in England, and he then delivers to Henry her dying words of love and blessing. These simply lead the King to hurry a project he had formed, and putting on his gracious mood—the Royal theme is heard here—he invites Don Gomez to return with him to Kimbolton Castle, where Catherine lies. We are next shown the interior of that place, and observe the ex-Queen as she hears a chorus of people singing the praises of their King to the theme of the last ensemble (Ex. 1). A long soliloquy follows, in which Catherine dwells upon the charms of her native Spain and the harsh fate that has pursued her under the grey skies of England. Musically, this is without "form" and much broken up by changes of rhythm and time. We doubt, therefore, whether in performance the effect be quite satisfactory, and are disposed to think that M. Saint-Saëns has not here made amends for previous shortcomings in Catherine's music. The dying lady next proceeds to distribute keepsakes among her attendants, and, taking up a "Book of Hours"—as she does so, the old love theme is heard—places therein Anne's fatal letter, and destines it for Don Gomez. At that moment a visitor is announced, and Anne Boleyn enters. A scene of recrimination on the one side and meek submission on the other follows, Anne's purpose being to get possession of the letter. She pleads hard to obtain it, but Catherine refuses, and the situation is at its height when the King suddenly enters with Don Gomez. M. Saint-Saëns's music to this dialogue is animated and expressive. The leit-motiven are occasionally introduced with effects, and the rules of climax are well observed. But the greatest climax is to come. Henry, after an ironical salute to Anne, addresses to Catherine words of sorrow for having put her away in favour of an infamous creature whose heart is all treason. "You," he continues, "have the proof in your own hands." The stroke is a bold one, but fails. The gentle Catherine shrinks from convicting her rival. Henry then tries to turn upon her jealousy by asking Anne's pardon for his suspicions, addressing her—while the joyous fête music outside recommences—in glowing strains full of beauty and charm. All this, and what follows, constitutes the famous quartet, compared by some critics, for dramatic expression, with that in the last act of "Rigoletto." There will not be an unanimous opinion to the same effect, but the number is a good one, and its music gains by a situation of the utmost intensity and suspense, as well as through the fine contrast of a joyous chorus without. At its close Catherine makes a last effort on the side of mercy, throws the compromising letter into the fire, and falls back dead—"Dead with her secret!" Henry ruefully exclaims. The work is now over, and the curtain descends as Henry, turning to Anne, while the sinister rhythm of the Death March is heard, warns her that the axe awaits those who deceive him.

It would be manifestly unfair to pronounce a verdict upon the entire Opera without witnessing a representation, but we have said more than enough to show that "Henry VIII." though of unequal merit, is a thing of mark. It points out M. Saint-Saëns as one from whom important contributions to lyric drama may be expected, and stamps him as a composer who knows how to reflect the musical spirit of his age without discarding the traditions which have come down clothed with all the authority of a splendid past.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The first performance in Berlin of "The Redemption," which had been postponed for several weeks, took place at the Sing-Akademie on the 11th ult., under the conductorship of Herr Alexis Holländer, who has made his name famous in the German metropolis by performing with his St. Cecilia Choral Society great works which have never before been heard in that city. His selection for this year of Gounod's sacred masterpiece was hailed on all sides with enthusiasm, and the performance was looked forward to with the keenest interest. According to the criticisms in the Berlin papers, the execution of the work was excellent, and left nothing to be desired. Chorus and orchestra were equally good, and the solos were excellently rendered by Mesdames Holländer and Müller-Swiatkowsky and Herren Stolzenberg and Hildach.

Two new works on Richard Wagner will shortly be published. One is by Francesco Florimo, of Naples, the great friend of Rossini and Bellini, and it will be interesting to see what he has to say about the great champion of Teutonic musical art. The second, by Henry Perl, will be made additionally attractive by contributions from Dr. Keppler, Wagner's medical adviser, who will no doubt give details concerning the illness and death of the master.

The first performance of the "Nibelungen Ring" in Italy will be given at Venice by Herr Angelo Neumann's company. If successful here, the enterprising impresario intends giving the work at Bologna, Milan, and other important Italian cities.

The Emperor of Austria's birthday will be celebrated in Vienna by the first performance in that city of Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde."

A committee has been formed in Leipzig for erecting a monument to Richard Wagner, who was a native of that town.

The sixtieth Musical Festival of the Lower Rhine will take place at Cologne, at Whitsuntide. As will be seen by the following list of works the programme on this occasion will be a particularly attractive one: First day, Haydn's "Creation" and Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. Second day, Historical Concert, when works ranging from Bach to the most modern compositions of Brahms and Bruch will form the programme. Herr Brahms will play on this occasion his Second Pianoforte Concerto. The third day will be devoted entirely to solo pieces, the most prominent amongst the artists engaged for this day being Senor Sarasate. The orchestra will consist of 120 performers, and the choir will number 600 voices. The Festival will be conducted by the veteran composer Dr. Ferdinand von Hiller.

The German-Tonkünstler-Verein will meet this year at Leipzig. The preliminary announcement which has been published gives the following information as to the performances: The meeting will begin on May 3, with a morning Concert, to be given in church, by the celebrated Riedel Gesang-verein. The following evening an instrumental and vocal Concert will take place at the theatre, and the day after will be occupied by a chamber music performance and an organ Concert in the Nicolai Church. A grand Concert, with chorus and orchestra, in the great hall of the Leipzig Crystal Palace, will be the chief attraction of the programme on the last day. Amongst the most important works selected are a Requiem by Draeske, the two Symphonic Poems "Prometheus" and "Ideale" by Liszt, a Symphony by Borodin, and a Violin Concerto by Tschaiakowski. Our talented countryman Eugene d'Albert will be one of the principal soloists.

One of the most celebrated male voice choirs in Germany, the "Männer Gesang-verein" of Cologne, will shortly give ten Concerts in London, the proceeds of which will be devoted to the fund for building an English church in the old Rhenish cathedral town.

The well-known Conservatorium of Leipzig celebrated the fortieth anniversary of its foundation on the 2nd ult. by a Concert, in which the most prominent of its present students appeared as soloists, and which terminated with some choral works sung by all the pupils.

Wilhelm, the celebrated violin-player, who has visited during his artistic career the whole of Europe, America and Australia, intends giving up travelling entirely and establishing a high school of violin-playing at his house in Biberich, near Wiesbaden.

Amongst Friedrich von Flotow's posthumous works two Operas have been found, one called "Sakuntala" and the other "The Musicians." The plot of the latter work is laid at the time of Mozart's presence in Mannheim.

At the Royal Opera House in Vienna, a cycle of all of Mozart's operatic works has just been given with the greatest success, and it is proposed to repeat the representations in aid of the erection of a Mozart statue in the same city.

On the 5th ult. a statue of Spohr was unveiled at Cassel. The celebrated composer lived thirty-seven years in that town, and most of his favourite compositions emanated from this period. The event was celebrated by a performance of his Operas "Jessonda" and "Faust" in the Royal Theatre, and of the Oratorio "The Last Judgment" in the Church.

Mr. Henry Stiehl, who left England some time ago for Reval, in Russia, recently gave the first performance in that town of Bach's "Passion" music. The rendering was excellent, and proved so successful that, by general desire, he went with his well-trained choir to St. Petersburg, where he repeated the work with equal success.

It is a curious fact that Gounod's "Redemption," which has met with such enormous success in this country and in America, and which has made its triumphal entry into Germany, Italy, Belgium and Holland, should fail to find a public hearing in the native country of the composer, and particularly in Paris. This curious neglect offered to the masterwork of one of the greatest living composers seems to strike many artists in Paris, and has induced Madame Fuchs, an ardent music-lover and very clever amateur, to arrange a private performance of the work in the Salons of Madame Erard. Our contemporary L'Art Musical writes thus on the subject: "That a celebrated composer, a universally admired master like Gounod, writes a work which is first performed out of his own country, is nothing very surprising in these prosaic times; that an English publisher buys the said work for all countries and sells his edition here, is still admissible; but that a lady, an ardent lover of music, devotes weeks to organise a performance of this exiled work, in which she herself takes a prominent part, and that the public regards all this as something quite natural—that is surprising and astonishes us. . . . The performance assisted by MM. Widor, Diémer and Vidal as instrumentalists, and Mesdames Fuchs, Storm, Ducroquet, Sabatier, and MM. Herman Léon, Quirot and Gaudubert as soloists, was excellent and created great enthusiasm amongst the invited audience."

A new Opera, "Lakmé," by Léo Delibes, who is well known as the composer of several very pretty ballets, was successfully produced at the Opéra-Comique in Paris, on the 14th ult. The principal characters were sustained by Mdles. Van Zandt, Frandin, Rémy, Molé and Pieron and MM. Talazac, Cobalet, Barré, &c. We shall shortly give our readers a detailed notice of the work, and therefore now restrict ourselves to a mere record of its production. The publisher of the Opera already announces that it will be translated into eight different languages.

M. Guilmant has recommenced his famous Organ Recitals at the Trocadéro in Paris. Special features of the two first Concerts which took place on the 19th and 26th ult. were Rheinberger's New Organ Sonata, No. 6; three Concertos by Handel with orchestral accompaniment, and some pieces by Bach for organ and orchestra.

M. Lebouc, in Paris, writes the Ménestrel, occasionally gives soirées with the object of bringing forward new compositions or foreign artists. At the soirée on Thursday, the 12th ult., before an audience composed entirely of artists, was performed a Trio for piano, violin and violoncello, by a young English composer, Mr. H. M. Birkdale-Corbett. This work, conceived in a lofty style, and containing much bold harmony, produced a great effect on the audience. It was magnificently executed by Madame Montigny-Remaury, M. Léonard, the celebrated violinist and professor, and M. Lebouc. A charming song by the same composer was afterwards sung.

The Duke of Camposelle will shortly produce, at his own expense, the Oratorio "Lucifer," by the well-known Belgian composer P. Benoit, at the Trocadéro in Paris.

M. Padeloup, who has been for twenty-two years Conductor of the celebrated "Concerts Populaires" in Paris, has addressed a letter to the general public asking for subscriptions to guarantee the maintenance of these Concerts.

Verdi, who has not added to his works since his last Opera, "Aida" and his "Requiem," is said to be writing music to a libretto founded on Shakespeare's "Othello." Some musical papers already announce the title of the new Opera as "Iago," and M. Vaucorbeil is said to have gone to Italy to secure the score for the Grand-Opéra in Paris. However, Verdi says, in a letter on this subject, that he has not yet written a note for this new work, be it called "Iago" or "Othello."

Henry Ketten, the well-known French pianist, who appeared some years ago at the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts, died at Paris on March 31, at the early age of thirty-five. He was a native of Baja (Hungary), and lived for a long time in Australia. Here he amassed a large fortune, which, however, he is said to have lost in speculation on the Paris Bourse. He was the composer of two Symphonies and several Operas, none of which have kept the stage.

GLOSSOP.—The Glossopdale Philharmonic Society has rendered itself popular by the performance, on the 19th ult., of Gounod's sacred Trilogie The Redemption. Had not the Philharmonic Society been well supported, it would have been impossible to carry out an undertaking of such magnitude, but by the kindness of the Mayor of Glossop, Mr. James Sidebottom, J.P., the president, the Society was enabled to enter upon the performance of the work with every hope of success. The Rev. J. T. Waddy, who, in 1878, gave the society the disposal of the Society the Wesleyan Chapel, the largest building in the town, and no less than 900 or 1,000 persons, embracing the dile of the town and neighbourhood, paid for admission, and had the pleasure of listening to a work of such sublimity as has never before been produced in Glossopdale. The band was largely augmented by performers from Charles Hall's and De Jong's Concerts, and the band and choruses comprised not less than 120 performers, for whom the hall had been made. The principal vocalists were Miss Halliwell, R.A.M.; Miss Jeanie Rosse, R.A.M.; Miss Fothergill, Mr. Seymour Jackson, Mr. J. Lander, Mr. J. Barrow, Mr. Walter Fielding, and Mr. James Makin. Both the solos and choruses were finely rendered; indeed it may be said of the entire performance that the manner in which the work was executed surpassed expectation, and Mr. Charles Hall, the Conductor, has won great credit for the admirable manner in which the chorus had been trained. A vast amount of labour must have been entailed in order to bring it to such perfection, and the carrying out of such a difficult undertaking calls for the highest encomiums upon all concerned. It is gratifying to find that the performance was a financial success.

Bac., Organist of the Cathedral, conducted.

HIGH WYCOMBE.—On the 2nd ult. the Choral Society gave its last Concert of the season in the Town Hall, before a large audience. The programme comprised Bennett's May Queen and a miscellaneous selection of vocal and instrumental music. The principal artists were Miss Fenna, Mrs. Webb, Mr. Hodgson and Mr. C. Rose. The performance was excellent, both soloists and chorus doing full justice to Bennett's charming work. In the second part Miss Fenna gave a fine rendering of Mozart's air from Don Giovanni, "Non mi dir," and Mr. J. G. Wrigley, Mus. Bac. Oxon., played a selection of Mendelssohn's Lieder and a Gavotte by Janotha. Bishop's "Now tramp," brought a most enjoyable Concert to a close.

The other solo vocalists were Madame Evans-Warwick, Mr. Bernard Lane, and Mr. W. Thomson. The programme also contained "The Quaker's Song" (Pinguet), and "Good-night," which were well received. LICHFIELD.—On Tuesday evening, the 10th ult., Mr. Henry Edward Hodson's Cantata The Golden Legend was performed by the Musical Society—an annual interest being given to the occasion by the fact of the composer being a citizen of Lichfield. Under the able conductorship of Mr. J. B. Lott, the Cantata had been in rehearsal two months previously to its production, and the result was an excellent rendering of the work throughout. The libretto of the Cantata, drawn entirely from Longfellow's words, may be divided thus: "Prince Henry's Coronation, and Elsie's self-devotion to save him. The journey to Salerno, where her death was to take place; and return of the Prince, with Elsie as his bride, to his ancestral home." The story of the Prince's devotion. The Prologue—Lucifer and his Spirits round Strasbourg Cathedral—precedes the Legend, and stands in place of overture. The Epilogue is the final chorus "O God 'tis Thine indulgence." The chorus and orchestra numbered about 150. Madame Worrell took the part of Elsie; Misses Gifford and Harris those of Bertha and Ursula; Masters Biffen and Grant those of the Angel of Good Deeds, and Max, Mr. Alfred Kenningham (at the last moment), that of the Prince (owing to Mr. Grayson's indisposition), and Messrs. Tuke, Harrison and Kempe those of Lucifer, Gottlieb and the Forester, respectively. The Prologue, one of the best portions of the whole Cantata, was finely given. The Legend itself opens with a very touching song with Lucifer. Here Mr. Hodson's dramatic power is shown with much effect, the climax being well arrived at in the Trio in which Lucifer's triumph, the Prince's delicious joy, and the Angel's warnings are skillfully combined. In the scene of Elsie's self-devotion, her striking contrast, and the Prince's "Rise up and look," and Quartet and Chorus, "O beauty of holiness," are exceedingly effective. It was noticeable how the interest of the audience grew as the musical story proceeded. "Still is the night," the Prince Henry's song with the watchmen, and the Pilgrims' Chorus, "Me receptum San illa," with Elsie as his bride is brought to the sad-hearted mother, and the River Chorus, "Fair and lovely" (splendidly sung and played) leads into the Wedding March and Paeon music; the applause was most enthusiastic, and the last number redemanded. After this climax, a very quiet dialogue and duet occurs between the Prince and Elsie, which is most delicately written, and created a marked effect. A very vigorous rendering of the Epilogue brought the Cantata to a close. The Lichfield Society must be congratulated on so successful a performance of their fellow citizens' music. The ovation given to the composer at the end of the work was most generous, the audience rising to hear his few words of thanks and gratification, which he concluded by requesting Mr. Lott to accept a bound copy of the Cantata. The work is undoubtedly one which will find a valuable addition to the library of any musical society in quest of new material, as both in story and music the interest is thoroughly maintained; and though it is music that requires pains, it is by no means out of ordinary reach.

The net proceeds of last year's Concert amounted to over £300, sufficient to feed, clothe, and educate twenty orphan children, and it is expected that the Orphanage and the Seamen's Orphanage will be exceeded this year. A performance by the Band of the Orphanage and the Seamen's Orphanage, The Pirates of Pensance by the Company of Pilots and 300 voices, were the chief features of the entertainment. A new song, "The Crew of the Betsy Jane," composed for the occasion by Claude Ridley, was encored, the composer and singer receiving quite an ovation. Mr. S. Claude Ridley conducted, and was assisted by Mr. J. Sprott at the piano-forte, and Mr. T. J. Ford at the harmonium. The Mayor of Liverpool presided. The Concert concluded with Mendelssohn's unfinished opera Loreley, which was sung with all the fire and vigour characteristic of the Society. THE CHILDREN'S HOUR

NEW PART-SONG. PRICE 3D.

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

This Part-Song, written for, and dedicated to, the Kyrie Society, is laid out in Mr. Gaul's very best manner, and while recalling, for its beautiful effects, his elegant Part-Song, "The Silent Land," the resemblance begins and ends there. Mr. Gaul knows to the very letter the capabilities of the voice he writes for, and one is perfectly safe, even after a single experience only, in predicting a widespread popularity to "The Children's Hour."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

THE HOLY CITY

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"The work is an honour to English Art, and has elevated its composer into a place of distinction amongst native musicians."—Queen.
"A good sound musical work is this 'Holy City.' I have no hesitation in saying that it creditably represents English art, and does honour not only to the skill but to the judgment and taste of Mr. Gaul."—Daily Telegraph.

"The reception was favourable in the extreme, and the Cantata must henceforth be classed among the successes which the Birmingham Musical Festivals have brought to light."—Standard.

"The 'Holy City' is evidently the work of a thoughtful as well as a clever composer, and should make its mark among thoroughly English productions of a sacred character."—Musical Times.

"We hope and believe that the reception given last night to Mr. Gaul and to his 'Holy City' Cantata will prove an earnest of its popularity and acceptance throughout the length and breadth of the land."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"A most interesting, tuneful, and scholarly work."—Manchester Courier.

"This fine work will considerably enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation as a musician."—Liverpool Daily Courier.
